

CRIMINAL TRIAL

————Compoundable case — Aquittal—
Subsequent resilement, effect of.

The Magistrate is in duty bound to order an acquittal on the filing of the compromise petition signed by both parties in Court for an offence which is compoundable without leave of the Court and the complainant cannot, by a subsequent withdrawal of the petition before any order is passed on it, insist upon the case being proceeded with. Dharichhan Singh v. Emperor.

————Compromise— Magistrate, if can send record of proceedings to Police for opinion—
Proper course.

A Magistrate has no right to send the record of the proceedings, before him which are of a judicial character, to the Superintendent of Police for taking his opinion. The proper course for him is to ask the Prosecuting Inspector to take his instructions from the District Magistrate, or from the Superintendent of Police, as to the attitude of the Crown towards the proposed compromise. Dharichhan Singh v. Emperor.

————Confession.

A confession must be accepted or rejected as a whole if it is to be relied on, the part which implicates as well as the part which exculpates, though the part which exculpates may appear inherently incredible because there is no evidence to prove that the part which exculpates is false. But by "evidence" is meant not only direct evidence but circumstantial evidence, and a Judge must not leave out of his consideration when considering the truth or falsity of a confession or its parts, those probabilities and those presumptions which may properly arise from the other evidence on record, regard being had to the common course of natural events and human conduct to which S. 114, Evidence Act, refers, because little evidence is necessary to rebut statements which are in themselves

EMIGRATION ACT (XXI OF 1883)

———S. 107—Master's liability for servant's act—Servant violating the provisions of the emigration in the course of his employment.

If a servant having been appointed as an agent for a particular business by his master enters into an agreement in connection with that business, everything which he does within the scope of his employment for that purpose will be binding upon the master, and the master will be criminally liable for such acts of the servant under Emigration Act. Emperor v. Haji Shaik Mahomad Shustri.

7 Cr. L. J. 238 :
9 Bom. L. R. 1059 : 32 Bom. 10.

———Ss. 107, 108—Scope and object of.

The coupling of the word "conditions" with the word "terms" in S. 107 of the Act makes out the intention of the Legislature to be that the officer authorised to grant the permission should have power to impose any reasonable terms and conditions he thinks proper as conditions precedent to the grant, whether they relate to the terms of the agreement itself or being extraneous to it, relate to the execution or other considerations which have to be taken into account in order to protect the interests of the Native of India departing out of it by sea. S. 29, Emigration Act, makes the execution of the agreement referred to there in the presence of the Protector, compulsory. In S. 108 of the Act, the power conferred on the Local Government, who have delegated their power to the Protector, is discretionary, and it is left to that Government to decide whether in any particular case any agreement referred to in S. 107 shall be executed or not in its presence, that is, in the presence of the Protector acting as its delegated authority. Emperor v. A. M. Jeevanjee.

6 Cr. L. J. 240 :
9 Bom. L. R. 967 :
I. L. R. 31 Bom. 611.

———S. 111 (1)—Scope and object of.

Where on an information a summons is issued to the accused, and owing to its disclosing no offence, a fresh summons is issued without any fresh or supplemental information, the error, omission or irregularity in the fresh summons, is not sufficient, under S. 537, Cr. P. C., to upset the finding and sentence unless it has in fact occasioned "a failure of justice." Sub-s. 1 of S. 111, Emigration Act, hits at not merely entering into an agreement but also at any attempt to enter into it. An attempt consists in some external act which shows that progress is made in the direction of it or towards maturing and effecting it, that is, something tangible and ostensible of which the law can take hold, which can be alleged and proved. Sub-s. 1 of S. 111, Emigration Act, 1883, does not break in upon the rule of law embodied in the maxim qui per alium facit per seipsum facit re videtur who does an act through another is deemed in law to do it himself. The Act leaves untouched the right of every person to enter into such agreements through an agent. It merely provides that such agreements shall not be entered into without the previous permission of the Local Government. The intention of the section is to hold the master liable for his servant's act, provided the act was done by the servant so as to bind the master according to the law of contract. Emperor v. A. M. Jeevanjee.

EMIGRATION ACT (VII OF 1932)

———S. 25 (2), (b)—Conviction under—Person assisting workers to emigrate for working on hire—Agreement to work for hire need not be proved for offence under S. 25 (2), (b).

When a person assists or attempts to assist skilled workers for emigrating to a place outside India for working on hire at his shop, it is not necessary for convicting that person of an offence under S. 25 (2) (b) to prove that there was an agreement between the person and the workers to work for hire. Neither it is necessary to consider whether the workers were in fact engaged by such person at his shop. Public Prosecutor v. Natesa Pillai.

A letter written by an accused person, when self-disserving, is prima facie evidence against him, if it relates distinctly to a relevant point; it is not necessary that it should be signed; it is enough if it is traced to the writer, and is admissible, though it was intercepted or surreptitiously detained and opened. *Booth G. EVIDENCE ———Exclusion of—Instigating breach of the peace—Direct evidence of specific incidents, relevancy of.

It is wrong to exclude from consideration direct evidence of specific incidents showing that the person to be bound down behaved as man of violent and aggressive temper. These are relevant to the question whether a man is likely to commit a breach of the peace or not and the evidence concerning those incidents is in no sense evidence of repute. Baines v. Emperor. 23 Cr. L. J. 394 :

67 I. C. 346 : A. I. R. 1922 Nag. 180.

———Exclusion of.

It is not always possible for the prosecution to prove the motive for crime, and the absence of any proof of motive is not in itself sufficient to justify the rejection of evidence which is otherwise reliable. Emperor v. Balochkhan. 11 Cr. L. J. 498 :

7 I. C. 601 : 4 S. L. R. 38.

———Exclusion of.

The mere fact that an eye-witness does not come forward immediately an investigation is begun, is not by itself in this country necessarily a sufficient ground for rejecting his testimony. Miran Bakhsh v. Emperor. 32 Cr. L. J. 1032 :

I. R. 1931 Lah. 782 :

A. I. R. 1931 Lah. 529.

———Exclusion of—Prosecution withholding evidence.

Prosecution witnesses can be kept back only when the Court is satisfied that they would not speak the truth. They cannot be kept back because they would not speak in favour of the prosecution. Emperor v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak. 1 Cr. L. J. 305 :

6 Bom. L. R. 324 :

I. L. R. 28 Bom. 479.

———Exclusion of—Refusal to cross-examine witnesses—Subsequent request for re-calling witnesses—Refusal of Magistrate, legality of.

Where the accused refuses to cross-examine prosecution witnesses when given an opportunity to do so, but subsequently requests to recall the witnesses for cross-examination, the refusal of Magistrate to comply with the request is justified. Khuda Bakhsh v. Emperor. 38 Cr. L. J. 24 :

———Exclusion of.

Witnesses, who voluntarily come forward, whether as friends or associates of an accused, to give him a good character, must not be brushed aside, unless they are discredited as regards their good faith and honesty just as witnesses in any other proceedings must be discredited before they are rejected by a Tribunal. *Angnoo Singh v. EVIDENCE ———Expert evidence—Finger print expert.

The evidence of a Finger Print Expert based on a comparison of a disputed thumb impression with other impressions of the alleged executant, is of no value where there is no evidence to show that the thumb impressions with which the disputed impression was compared were those of the alleged executant. The fact that, in such a case, the accused did not take the objection that the impressions with which the disputed impression was compared were not the thumb impressions of the alleged executant in his written statement, nor at the trial, does not relieve the prosecution of the burden of proving their identity. Gaffar Buksh Khan v. Emperor. 28 Cr. L. J. 411 :

———Expert evidence—Identification—Finger-prints.

The accused was charged with theft after three previous convictions, under Chap. XVII, Penal Code. To prove these convictions, which the accused denied, certain "Finger Impression Slips", were produced, together with statements signed by the officer in charge of the Finger-print Bureau to the effect that the impressions appearing thereon were those of the person against whom the specified convictions had been had. An officer of the Finger-print Bureau took impressions of the accused's fingers in Court and identified him as the person whose finger prints appeared on the "Finger Impression Slips": Held, that the previous convictions of the accused stated on the slips were not proved merely by the production of such slips. Hulost v. Emperor. 7 Cr. L. J. 406 :

A Magistrate, after recording the evidence for the prosecution and without framing a charge, asked the accused to name his witnesses and took down their evidence. He came to the conclusion that the case was false and wrote a full judgment after discussing all the evidence in the case and passed an order of discharge: Held, (1) that the procedure adopted by the Magistrate in asking the accused to name his witnesses before framing a charge was unwarranted: (2) that inasmuch as the procedure actually adopted was in substance that laid down in Chap. XXI except for the framing of a charge and the recording of a plea, the case could, in view of S. 535 (1), have ended in a valid order of acquittal. Where after a discharge a new complaint is filed alleging discovery of further evidence, the proper procedure would be to postpone issue of process till the former proceedings have been examined and a preliminary enquiry has been made regarding the alleged new evidence. *Orilal v. The fact that there is congestion of work in the Sessions Court is not a legal ground on which a Magistrate can decline to commit a case to the Court of Session. A Magistrate's powers of committal to the Sessions are not confined to cases where he considers that he cannot give adequate punishment. Other circumstances, such as, the gravity of the offence, the punishment prescribed for the offence, the section under which the accused is charged, the special difficulties of the case, its public importance and the wishes of the parties are matters to be considered in deciding the question whether a case should be committed to the Sessions and each case, has to be decided on its merits. Where the editor of a newspaper having a very wide circulation was charged with an offence under S. 124-A, Penal Code, and the accused prayed that he may be committed to the Sessions and the Magistrate refused to commit, the High Court held, that the case was a fit one for committal and directed the Magistrate to commit. *Krishnaji Prabhakar v. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 254

Sessions—Committal to Sessions, by Magistrate having power to sentence adequately, legality of—Grounds of commitment—Warrant cases, powers of Magistrate in trial of.

S. 254, Cr. P. C. makes it imperative on a Magistrate only to frame a charge and not to complete the trial to conviction or acquittal. That section simply lays down the procedure for the trial of warrant cases where the Magistrate considers it right and proper for himself to go on with the trial and is in no way a limitation of the right of a Magistrate given to him under S. 347 to commit a case for trial if he thinks that he should do so. S. 347, Cr. P. C. does not restrict the grounds on which a Magistrate should arrive at his opinion to commit a case to want of jurisdiction in himself or to his inability, in his own opinion, to sentence the accused adequately. Even where he can inflict the maximum sentence for the offence, he may still commit the accused for trial to the Court of Session or the High Court on such grounds as complicated question of law arising or the case being a fit one to be tried by Jury or with the aid of Assessors. The powers of a Magistrate who has taken a warrant case on his file for trial, are as follows:—He may try it through himself if he has jurisdiction; he may, if he thinks he cannot inflict a proper sentence, act under S. 364 or 349 and send it to a higher Magistrate; or he may, if he thinks that it is a proper case for Sessions, commit the accused under S. 347 or if he has not power to commit, send it to another Magistrate to commit under S. 346. *Crown Prosecutor v. A Magistrate is not at liberty to substitute for the procedure of the Code a procedure which has arisen by usage, however convenient the latter may be. The provisions of the Code must be followed. Where, therefore, in trying two cross-complaints, the Magistrate heard the evidence for the prosecution in each and without framing a charge formally as required by S. 254, Cr. P. A Magistrate is entitled to put a question to the accused as to whether he wants to cross-examine prosecution witnesses either immediately after the charge is framed or on the next date after the charge is framed ; but if he puts the question on the date the charge is framed, he is to give his reasons in writing for doing so under S. 256, Cr. P. C. His failure to give his reasons in writing, however, does not amount to anything more than an irregularity. At best it is a kind of omission in procedure contemplated by S. 537, which can be cured. If, therefore, such failure does not prejudice the accused, it does not vitiate the trial. *Nisar Ahmad v. S. 256, Cr. P. C., does not say at what particular time the accused is to be asked the question whether he wishes to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, and up to what time he has this right. Therefore, where the accused was asked the question at the time of framing the charge and he could not at that instant answer, but subsequently before the case had been closed applied for recalling some of the prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, and the Magistrate refused the application on the grounds that the accused had waived his right and that the witnesses were sufficiently cross-examined before the charge : Held, that the order was against the wording and spirit of S. 256, and that the conviction of the accused must be quashed. *Inder Rai v. summon defence witnesses—Refusal of application—Not a mere irregularity—Conviction illegal.

After the examination of the prosecution witnesses in this case, a charge was framed against the accused and read and explained to him. He pleaded not guilty and was then asked whether he wished to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses. The accused who was not defended by a Pleader, asked that time be granted to him to engage a Vakil and for cross-examining the witnesses. The Magistrate construed this as a refusal to cross-examine. Subsequently, the accused's Vakil applied for process to compel the attendance of the prosecution witnesses and for summons to defence witnesses. The Magistrate refused both the prayers on the ground that the accused, on the framing of charge, refused to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, and that the defence witnesses could not give reliable evidence one way or the other: Held, (1) that as the accused had no opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses, and was not previously informed that a charge would be framed against him on the date on which it was framed, the prosecution witnesses ought to have been re-summoned for cross-examination. The accused's application for adjournment to engage a Pleader was reasonable and ought to have been granted; (2) that the Magistrate's refusal to summon the defence witnesses was not a mere irregularity but an illegality, as he had no means for forming the opinion that the defence witnesses could not give any reliable evidence. *Arumugam Pillai v. The general rule laid down by S. 256, Cr. P. A Magistrate cannot, however, make it a rule of his Court to ask the accused in every case after the charge is framed to state forthwith whether he wishes to cross-examine any of the witnesses examined on behalf of the prosecution. *Emperor v. It is not until a specific charge has been drawn up and explained to the accused that he is in a position fully to cross-examine the witnesses for the Crown and, therefore, he should, in all cases, be asked at that time if he wishes to recall witnesses for cross-examination, for the omission to follow the procedure involves remand and retrial of the case from the point of drawing up of the charge. *Moola v. Inasmuch as an accused person has the right to cross-examine the witnesses for the prosecution before the charge is framed, and under S. 256, Cr. P. Where an accused person seeks to exercise the right given by S. 256, Cr. P. C., of re-calling prosecution witnesses for cross-examination, he cannot legally be required to deposit the expenses likely to be incurred by the witnesses who attend for such cross-examination. Where, in order to suit the convenience of the Court or for reasons connected with discharge of public business, the witnesses for the prosecution are allowed to leave before a charge is framed or the right conferred by S. 256 exercised, they must be required to attend again and ordinarily any expenses which may be allowed them on this score should be paid by Government in warrant cases. In warrant-cases, hearing should be continued from day to day until the prosecution witnesses have been cross-examined by the accused; and the witnesses should not be discharged until the Court has ascertained whether their cross-examination after the charge is desired. An accused person should not be called on to enter on his defence before he has cross-examined the witnesses for the prosecution who are in attendance. Birdhichand v. Lakhmichand.

After a charge has been framed, unless the accused pleads guilty, the Magistrate is bound to ask the accused whether he wishes to cross-examine any, and if so, which of the witnesses for the prosecution whose evidence has been taken, and the Magistrate is bound to procure the attendance of those witnesses. But where a witness who has been examined and cross-examined before the framing of the charge goes abroad, a Magistrate can admit his evidence under S. 33, Evidence Act, if he considers that the evidence of the witness cannot be obtained without an unreasonable amount of delay or expense. The omission of a Magistrate to record at the proper stage the reasons for admitting such evidence, is a mere irregularity curable under S. 537, Cr. P. C. By S. 256, Cr. P. According to S. 256, Cr. P. C., the accused cannot enter upon his defence until and unless all the prosecution evidence has been exhausted and the further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses is completed. The Court, therefore, acts illegally in ordering further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses and the production of the defence evidence on the same day. It should fix a date for further cross-examination of the accused for the production of his defence or waived, it should give another date to the accused for the production of his defence. It is consequently bound to send for the defence witnesses of the accused under S. 257, Cr. P. C., and cannot strike out the defence of the accused merely because the accused had not asked the Court to summon his witnesses for the day on which the accused had to further cross-examine the prosecution witnesses. *Abdul Ghafur Abdul Hamid v. If he adopts the latter course and certain witnesses remain from the list who have not been examined, then those witnesses are the remaining witnesses under S. 256 (1) and the complainant has a right to produce them after the cross-examination of those witnesses who have been previously examined. But if the Magistrate has examined all the witnesses for the prosecution in the list under S. 252 (2) and has then framed a charge-sheet, there are no witnesses remaining who could come under the description in S. 256 (1). It would depend on the facts of each case whether the contravention of S. 256, Cr. P. C. amounts to a mere irregularity of procedure or to an illegality vitiating the trial. Where S. 256, has not been complied with by a Magistrate, there are two courses open to the Sessions Judge on appeal, namely, either to set aside the conviction and sentence and order the Magistrate to commence from the point where the illegality occurred or to order a de novo trial. It is not open to the Sessions Judge to keep the appeal pending and direct the Magistrate to record the cross-examination of the witnesses and forward the record to him. If a Sessions Judge wrongly directs the Magistrate to record the cross-examination and forward the record to him, his successor cannot, however, review his order and send the case back to the Magistrate to record a judgment after taking the further evidence of the witnesses into consideration. The proper procedure to be followed by him in such a case is to make a reference to the High Court under S. 438, Cr. P. C., invoking the revisional power of this Court to correct the error which was committed by his predecessor. Emperor v. Lakshman Ramshet Alwe.

A conviction of a person, whose trial was commenced and finished on a Sunday is liable to be set aside on the ground of irregularity in procedure, which has prejudiced the accused as he cannot be said to have had a fair opportunity of defending himself by engaging a lawyer. It is not so much the recording of the reasons, as the adequacy thereof, which should count in the determination of the question, whether the provisions of S. 256, Cr. P. C., have been complied with. If no good reasons are forthcoming, merely recording them in writing by the Magistrate will not save a trial from the taint of an incurable irregularity, if it results in a prejudice to the accused. Under S. 256 sufficient time must be given to the accused to consider whether he wishes to cross-examine any of the prosecution witnesses after the framing of the charge and it is only in special cases that the Magistrate can require him to state forthwith if he so wishes. *Girdhari v. Under S. 257, Cr. P. C., when the accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity to cross-examine the prosecution witnesses after the charge is framed, their attendance shall not be compelled unless the Magistrate is satisfied that it is necessary for the purposes of justice and the Court is also competent to require the accused to deposit in Court reasonable expenses of the witnesses to be thus summoned. But where the witnesses have in fact been summoned at Government expense and they are present in Court, the Magistrate should not refuse to allow them to be cross-examined by the accused unless

S. 257—Cross-examination—Refusal, grounds for.

S. 257, Cr. P. C., is imperative in its terms, and the only ground in which a Magistrate can refuse to grant an application to re-call witnesses for cross-examination, is that it is made for the purpose of vexation or delay, or defeating the ends of justice; and such ground must be recorded by him in writing. Emperor v. Madud.

S. 257—Cross-examination—Refusal to re-call witness.

While a Magistrate is bound under S. 257 (1), Cr. P. C., to issue process on the application of an accused person who has entered on his defence for compelling the attendance of a witness for the purpose of examination or cross-examination, the proviso to that section definitely prohibits the Magistrate from issuing such process if the accused has cross-examined or had the opportunity of cross-examining the witness after the charge was framed, unless the Magistrate is satisfied that such attendance is necessary for the purpose of justice, that is to say, unless he is convinced of the existence of the strongest possible ground for disregarding the prohibition. The exception to the prohibition must not be read as swallowing up the prohibition or the whole proviso in enjoining that the Magistrate shall issue process if he is not satisfied that the attendance of the witness is unnecessary for the ends of justice, or if he is not satisfied that the application is made for vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. On the contrary the prohibition may not be disregarded unless in the opinion of the Magistrate the purposes of justice not merely warrant but demand such disregard. It is not incumbent upon the Magistrate to record in writing his reasons for not being satisfied that the attendance of a witness is necessary for the purposes of justice. Ajo Milan v. Emperor.

Under S. 257, Cr. P. C., a Magistrate has

S. 257—Cross-examination—Right of accused after entering as defence.

The accused, even after he has entered upon his defence, is entitled to have the prosecution witnesses summoned for cross-examination, unless the Magistrate considers that such application should be refused on the ground that it was made for the purpose of vexation or delay or for defeating the ends of justice. The failure of the Magistrate to record his reasons in writing for refusing the application of the accused to re-summon the witnesses is an illegality which vitiates the trial. *Manomohan Dasidhar v. Where in a case of criminal breach of trust, the Magistrate allowed the application of the complainant's possession after the examination-in-chief of the witnesses for the prosecution had concluded but before the charge had been framed : Held, that the Magistrate should not have entertained the application at that stage of the case but should have informed the accused that he was at liberty to renew it if the charge was framed against him. The accused's right to call evidence, either witnesses or documents, does not arise until after the charge has been framed and read to him. The right is given by S. 257 and is subject to the limitations enjoined by that section. The Magistrate should satisfy himself that the documents called for have some bearing on the issues in the case and are relevant before granting a summons for their production. *Tahitram Lalaram v. Refusal of a Magistrate to issue process to a witness named by the accused when such refusal in regard to any particular witness is not based on any grounds mentioned in S. 257, Cr. P. Therefore where the accused alleges that he requires to examine the trying Magistrate as a witness, it is inexpedient to place the Magistrate in the awkward position of rejecting the accused's application as vexatious and the case ought to be transferred to the file of some other Magistrate. *Emperor v. But if the Magistrate has once allowed witnesses to be summoned and has not exercised on that occasion the discretion which he could have exercised if he had so chosen under S. 257, and if by any chance the witnesses summoned for a particular date have not been examined on that date, he has no power afterwards to say that shall not be summoned except on the payment of their expenses by the accused. *Kishen Lal v. S. 257—Defence witnesses—Refusal to summon—Prejudice to accused.
Ordinarily once a Magistrate has given orders that a certain witness should be called, he should take such steps as may be necessary or possible to enforce the attendance of the witness. It cannot, however, be laid down that in no case is it possible for the Magistrate, if he comes to the conclusion that the attendance of the witness is not really necessary, to dispense with his attendance. A prosecution witness was cross-examined at length before and after charge. Subsequently the accused made an application that the witness may be summoned and examined as a defence witness. The Magistrate acceded to this request and granted two adjournments for the purpose of summoning the witness, who, however, could not attend and eventually the Magistrate dispensed with the attendance of the witness on the ground that as he had been cross-examined at length, his examination as defence witness was not necessary : Held, that in the absence of any prejudice to the accused as the result of the refusal of the Magistrate to summon the witness, it could not be said that the Magistrate had acted entirely without jurisdiction. Ramsakal Rai v. Emperor.

One of the two persons stated by the prosecution to be the ring-leaders of an affray which was the subject of the trial pleaded alibi and asked permission to call a certain witness to prove it. This witness wrote to the Court stating his inability to attend on account of ill-health and sent medical certificate to that effect. On the date of the hearing the accused applied to the Court for the issue of a commission to examine this witness at his house. The Magistrate was of opinion that the case being important, the witness should be examined in Court and as it was not known when the witness would be well enough to attend the Court, he dismissed the application : Held, (1) that some effort should have been made to ascertain as to whether it would, within a reasonable time, be possible for the witness to come to Court and if not, then to take the evidence on Commission ; (2) that the Magistrate, therefore, should now take this evidence, if possible, and re-consider in the light of this evidence the case of all the accused before him. *Jamuna Singh v. Ss. 257, 537—Defence witnesses—Magistrate, whether can refuse to summon—Refusal, grounds of—Witnesses not served or not in attendance.
When an accused person has entered upon his defence and has asked for any witness to be summoned on his behalf, the Magistrate cannot refuse to summon them, except where vexation and delay, in which case he must record a finding to that effect when refusing to summon the witnesses. Once a Magistrate has summoned the witnesses, and they are either not in attendance or have not been served, he has no right to refuse to re-summon them on the ground that their evidence would be superfluous or unnecessary. A refusal by a Magistrate to summon witnesses for the accused in the foregoing circumstances amounts to an illegality not curable by S. 537. Muhammad Din v. Emperor. 22 Cr. L. J. 497 : 62 I. —Ss. 257, 537—Defence witnesses—Refusal to summon.

S. 257, Cr. P. C. is neither imperative nor exhaustive. It is a sufficient compliance with S. 257 (2) if a Magistrate in rejecting an application for summoning the defence witnesses states the fact which lead him to the conclusion that the application involved, vexation, delay or defeating the ends of justice, although the Magistrate has not expressly recorded his reasons for the refusal in the words of the section, and in any case such a failure does not amount to an illegality vitiating the trial but is merely an irregularity curable by S. 537, Cr. It is a sufficient compliance with the requirements of S. 257 (1), if a Magistrate while rejecting an application for summoning further defence witnesses states facts which have led him irresistibly to the conclusion that the application was for no other purpose than that of vexation or delay or defeating the ends of justice, although he does not say expressly that the application was for that purpose. *Wahid Ali v. A Magistrate has no right arbitrarily to limit the number of witnesses called by an accused in his defence. The language of S. 257, Cr. P. The person who applies for their attendance is the best Judge of the matter and it is not for the Magistrate to say which witnesses shall and which shall not be of any use to him. The only grounds upon which an application for the summoning of witnesses can be refused are

—————S. 357—Witnesses, attendance of—Accused, right of—Duty of Court.

There is no reason why, within all reasonable limits, an accused person should not be entitled to obtain the assistance of the Court in bringing before it all such persons as he may think are necessary in order to protect himself against the accusation and charge which has been brought against him in connection with any criminal offence. Mere technicalities as to whether he applies to the Court for enforcing the attendance of his witnesses at one moment or a little later should not deprive him of his right. It does not matter in the least to the Tribunal or to the administration of justice, whether there is or is not a trifling delay in the operation and conduct of proceedings. The only important thing from a fundamental point of view is that the Tribunal should ascertain what is the truth of the accusation which has been brought against the accused. *Beni v. —S. 260—House-breaking and assault—Summary trial—Charge with regard to assault ignored—Acquittal on charge of house-breaking—Irregularity—Re-trial.

Complainant made a report to the Police in which he stated that during his absence from his house the previous night, the accused had entered his house and on being questioned by his wife as to why he had come, he had caught the complainant's wife by the neck, but on the woman's crying out and the complainant and other persons coming into house the accused ran away. The case was entered in the Station Diary as one under S. 456, Penal Code but on investigation the Police sent up charges under Ss. 457 and 354, Penal Code. The Magistrate ignored the charge under S. 354 and tried the case summarily in respect on the charge under S. 457 and acquitted the accused. On appeal by the Crown: Held, that no case having been originally entered under S. 354, Penal Code, and the complainant having made no express allegation that the modesty of his wife had been outraged, the Magistrate was entitled to ignore the charge sent up by the Police under S. 354 and to proceed to try the charge under S. 457 summarily. Graham, J., contra—That the Magistrate having disbelieved the prosecution story with regard to the charge under S. 457, the charge under S. 354 necessarily fell to the ground and no re-trial was necessary. Government of Assam v. Kantila Chutia.

The words "if any" in S. 263, do not limit the obligation imposed on Courts by S. 342 or render it inapplicable to summary trial. The examination of the accused is an essential part of the procedure. Such examination need not be taken with all the formalities prescribed by S. 364. Devijimal v. Emperor.

—S. 263—Examination of witnesses—Summary trial—Refusal by Magistrate to take evidence, if legal—Recording evidence not same as hearing evidence.

S. 263 does not excuse a Magistrate from hearing the evidence of all witnesses. It only excuses him from recording the evidence of any of the witnesses. Recording evidence is not the same as hearing evidence. In all criminal trials, if the accused denies the charge, the complainant and such witnesses as he must produce must be examined and the case may be decided upon the effect of their evidence. *Jabar Sheikh v. The law requires that a Magistrate or a Bench of Magistrates in a summary trial should give a brief statement of the reasons for their finding. A judgment in a single line is not a judgment in accordance with the law. Jankey Rai v. Emperor.

20 Cr. L. J. 431 :
51 I. C. 207 : A. I. R. 1919 Pat. 253.

An objection was raised that the Magistrate failed to comply with the provisions of S. 264, Cr. P. C., in that he did not record a judgment embodying the substance of the evidence. Apparently the case came under S. 263 : Held, that if it had come within that section, there would have been no error in the Magistrate writing as his order merely the word "Acquitted," as Cl. (b) of S. 263 requires a brief statement of the reasons for the finding only, when the accused has been convicted, and there is nothing to compel a Magistrate to give his reasons, when he acquits.

It was argued that S. 264, which requires a judgment embodying the substance of the evidence in an appealable case, should have been followed: because the Local Government has an appeal against any order of acquittal, and consequently, the case was an appealable case : Held, that to adopt such an interpretation would stultify S. 263, which must be read, as if the words "by a convicted person" followed after the words "in cases where no appeal lies." Narayansawmy v. A. Blake.

3 Cr. L. J. 433 :

In passing judgment under S. 263, it is incumbent on the Magistrate to record his finding, and "a brief statement of the reasons therefor." The reasons so recorded should be sufficient to show that the Magistrate has considered each of the ingredients necessary for a conviction, and also sufficient to enable the Court of revision to judge whether there are sufficient materials to justify the conviction and sentence. *Imperator v. Section 263 does not prevent a Magistrate who tries a case in a summary way from recording evidence; it merely says that he need not but if he does, it cannot, by reason of S. 264, form part of the record and the evidence so recorded does not come within the meaning of S. 350. *Emperor v. The three things required under S. 263, Cr. P. An Appellate Court, in order to test the substance of the evidence forming part of the judgment in a summary case under S. 264, Cr. P. The accused claimed to be tried as a European British subject and there was no question as to his being such; consequently the Magistrate could only try him under Chap. 33 of the Code, and it must be taken that, as the Magistrate was, under S. 443, competent to try him, he did try him under that chapter: Held, that assuming that if the Magistrate convicted the accused, he would have sentenced him to at most a fine of some amount under Rs. 200, still the accused would have had an appeal under S. 408, for

S. 416 enacts that S. 414, which prevents an appeal in such a case when the convicted person is not a European British subject, does not apply to a case in which sentence is passed under Chap. 33 on any European British subject: Held, also that under any view, the case was an appealable case and that S. 264 of the Code applied and that it was not complied with. *Narayanasamy v. In a matter which affects the summoning and empanelling of a jury, the procedure of a High Court should be followed by the Judicial Commissioner's Court exercising its original criminal jurisdiction. So far as the Judicial Commissioner's Court is concerned, Proviso 3 to S. 276, refers to that Court in the exercise of its original criminal jurisdiction, and S. 276 in S. 266 must be read as referring to the section itself and not to the Provisos. In a trial under S. 401, Penal Code, although a number of independent charge-sheets were originally filed, there is nothing objectionable if in the Sessions Court only one charge has been framed against all the accused, when all the accused are in fact members of a gang, for, all the members can be tried together for the offence of being members of the gang. It matters not how and when they were arrested. In such a case, the proof of the association of the accused outside British India for the purposes of committing crimes is not barred under S. 188, Cr. P. C., read with S. 4, Penal Code, for the Court is not concerned with the trial of a person for an offence committed outside British India, but with the fact that the accused committed offences outside British India, which affords

The expression "by the Court" in S. 271 and a "Court of Session" in S. 412 obviously mean the "Judge" only, who, in his discretion, may convict on the plea of guilty. Once he has exercised his discretion under S. 271 (2), no considerations can be adduced to show that that discretion was not properly exercised so as to affect the provisions of S. 412 by which the appeal is restricted to question of sentence only. *Shyama Charan v. The accused confessed having killed his wife, and pleaded guilty at his trial for committing the offence of murder. The Sessions Judge recorded briefly the evidence of two prosecution witnesses to determine whether the offence committed was or was not culpable homicide amounting to murder. He found that the offence was murder and sentenced the accused to transportation for life on the ground that the accused 'without being actually insane so as not to be aware of what he was doing, appears to be decidedly a man of weak intellect.' On appeal it was urged that the accused was insane or at any rate incapable of understanding the charge against him. The Chief Court set aside the conviction and ordered re-trial and enquiry under S. 465, Cr. P. C. Pala Singh v. Emperor.

-----S. 275—Jury trial—Right, when to be claimed.

To enable an accused person who is an Indian British-subject to claim to be tried by a Jury consisting of majority of his countrymen, it is a condition precedent that he should have claimed that right before the Committing Magistrate who is then to enquire into the matter and give his finding thereon, which, if adverse to the accused, may be challenged in subsequent proceedings. An accused person is debarred from setting up such a plea for the first time at any subsequent stage. Emperor v. Soomar Abdulla.

-----S. 276—Jurors, choosing of—Common and special juries—Procedure.

Both the substantive part of S. 276 and Proviso 2 to that section govern both common and special juries, and proceedings in High Courts and Sessions Courts. When the trial of the case has not been begun, S. 276, Proviso 2, would apply. A juror can only be chosen from the persons present. Persons even qualified cannot be called from outside the precincts of the Court. Ss. 276 and 279 contemplate that the choosing of the jury shall be a continuous process at the beginning of the trial, and from the persons summoned to appear and present in Court at the commencement of the proceedings. A deficiency is only apparent after the names of all those summoned and present have been exhausted by the chances of the lottery and challenge and Ss. 276 and 279 do not contemplate that a deficiency shall be recognized and then obviated by the summoning of fresh jurors, so that the jury can be summoned and chosen in three instalments. It is the actual presence of the potential juror in the Court which is the condition of his eligibility. That is the safeguard that even in this case there shall be an element of chance which is present in the choosing by lot of the other jurors. The fact then that the person subsequently summoned may be on the special jury list is no substitute for the fact that he was not present. Shewaram Jethanand Shivdasani v. Emperor.

-----S. 276—Jurors, choosing of—Deficiency, meaning of.

The word ‘deficiency in S. 276 (2) refers to the deficiency in the number by which the number of persons answering their names and empannelled falls short of the number of persons of which the Jury should consist. The practice followed in the Mofussil Courts of ascertaining beforehand how many of the persons summoned to serve as Jurors have attended and of thus determining the deficiency to be supplied is erroneous. *Kidar Nath Mahato v. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 276

In a Sessions trial before a Judge of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, sitting in its Sessions Court jurisdiction, in the first instance, thirty persons were called to serve as jurors from the special jury list prepared in accordance with Ss. 313 and 314, Cr. P. C. and of these eleven were unserved and nineteen were present in Court. After the parties had exercised their right of challenge under S. 277, only eight jurors out of the nine required under S. 274 (1) had been secured. The Judge directed the Clerk of the Crown in accordance with the rules framed by the Court, to issue fresh summonses and two more persons were summoned. Of these one S arrived and was chosen. He was not chosen by lot, and then one juror, R. already chosen, asked, on the ground of urgent business, to be excused, and he was allowed to go and S took his place. Still one juror was wanted and then the Clerk of the Crown ordered summonses on four other persons from the special jury list to be issued and out of those four persons summoned two appeared. Of these two, one M was chosen by lot: Held, that there were irregularities in empanelling the jury and the trial was vitiated as the jury was not properly constituted. There was an irregularity when S was chosen as one juror when he appeared in answer to a summons because he was not chosen by lot or from among the persons summoned before a deficiency appeared, nor could he be deemed to have been added to the jury in place of R under the provisions of S. 282. There was also an irregularity in choosing the last juror. So far as R. 18 of the Rules of the Judicial Commissioner's Court authorized the procedure followed by the Judge, it was ultra vires. Shewaram Jethanand Shivdasani v. Emperor.

Where out of twelve Jurors summoned in a case only five

S. 276, Cr. P. C. provides, in the first instance, for a ballot among the persons summoned under S. 326, all of whom may or may not be present. When their names have been exhausted, if a Jury has not yet been empanelled, the Court may, in its discretion, allow the number requisite to complete the Jury to be chosen from among the by-standers or may adjourn the case for a fresh Jury to be summoned. As each name is drawn and called aloud, if the person summoned answers, or as each Juror is chosen from among the by-standers, should that point have been reached, and that course be permitted, the accused shall be asked if he objects to be tried by such Juror. Should the objection be allowed, the Court should proceed as laid down in S. 279 (2) adopting the course prescribed according as there are or are not persons left from among those summoned whose names have not been drawn. *Kedar Nath Mahato v. Where the language of the Court is Hindi, Hindi-knowing Jurors and Assessors are competent to take part in the trial of cases in which the evidence, arguments and summing-up are given in Hindi, even though evidence is taken down in English. There is a provision in S. 282, Cr. P. C. for the case in which in the course of a trial it appears that any Juror is unable to understand the language in which evidence is given, or, when such evidence is interpreted, the language in which it is interpreted ; in such a case, a new Juror has to be added, or the Jury has to be discharged and the trial must commence anew. There is no similar provision with regard to assessors; but assuming that the principle applies, the fact that an assessor does not understand English will not invalidate a trial unless there had been a failure to interpret in Hindi evidence which had been given in English. Where some of the documents are in English, it may be less convenient to have an assessor who does not know the language of the documents thereby necessitating loss of time in interpreting, etc., but the matter does not go to the competency of the assessor or the lawful constitution of the Court. *Ram Babu Jadav v. In a dacoity case a witness who was examined as P. W. No. 13 gave evidence before the Committing Magistrate and, in the course of that evidence, as recorded, he stated, among other things, that, on a particular night, he saw 18 or 19 persons coming out of the barhi of the accused Bhuta. When the case was tried in the Sessions Court, this piece of evidence which, if true, was extremely important, was not thought of such importance by the prosecution that they were minded to examine this witness before the Jury at all. He was tendered merely for cross-examination. The learned Judge, however, in his charge to the Jury said: "P. W. No. 13 says that he saw 18 or 19 persons coming out of Bhuta's barhi on Saturday evening. Of course he did not say he recognised the men: Held, that the conviction of the accused could not be upheld as a very damaging piece of evidence which

In order that the statement of a witness examined in the Court of the Committing Magistrate and admitted by the Sessions Judge under S. 288 may be used against the accused, the Judge must inform the accused as also the prosecution that he is going to treat it as evidence against him under that section so as to give an opportunity to cross-examine the witness with reference to such statement. Under S. 288 the whole of the previous statement is to be treated as evidence and not only portions of it. It is, therefore, essential that the whole of such statement should be put to the witness and merely portions of it for the purpose of contradiction and then after notice to the prosecution and the accused, it can be brought on record. *Musa v. Witnesses who retract in the Sessions Court their statements made before the Committing Magistrate are lying witnesses, as they must have spoken falsehood either before the Committing Magistrate or in the Sessions Court. In their case, the Sessions Judge must tell the Jury in his charge that their evidence should be regarded with great caution. The Jurors ordinarily are not men who are used to weighing evidence and it is, therefore, necessary that all help should be given to them in estimating the evidence in the light of the observations made by the learned Judge in deciding cases. Where instead of cautioning the Jury as to placing reliance on the evidence of witnesses who have retracted their statements made before the Committing Magistrate, the Judge expresses his opinion in his charge with a certain degree of assertion in the words: "It seems clear to me that these witnesses have decided to go as far as they possibly can towards altering their evidence in such a way as shall secure the acquittal of the accused," the charge is vitiated, although the Judge also tells the Jury "it is for you to say whether you feel convinced as to the truth of the Magisterial depositions to an extent which would warrant you as prudent men in acting upon them." *Abdul Gani Bhuya v. The words "for all purposes subject to the provisions of the Evidence Act," are introduced in S. 288, for the purpose of removing any doubts as to the right of the Court to treat the evidence given before the Committing Magistrate as substantive evidence in the trial, when such evidence has been transferred to the Court's record. Therefore, where a witness after corroborating the statement of an approver before the Committing Magistrate goes upon his statement before the Sessions Judge, and the latter transfers, under S. 288, to his own record the statement of the witness made before the Committing Magistrate, the statement so transferred may be used as substantive evidence in the case precisely as if it had been made before the Sessions Judge himself. The existence of minor discrepancies between statements made in the Sessions Court and the Committing Magistrate's Court and the Sessions Court is not sufficient to justify the bringing bodily on to the record of the statement of a witness under S. 288, Cr. Once a Court has admitted, on behalf of the prosecution, evidence under S. 288, the depositions so admitted are just as much evidence for the prosecution in the case as the depositions recorded for the prosecution in the Sessions Court. There is nothing in S. 288 which indicates that there is any difference in the probative value of the former when compared with the latter. In admitting in evidence under S. 288, the depositions given in the Committing Court, the principle to be observed is that where witnesses are so careless of the truth as to abandon readily on oath what they had previously sworn on oath, their statements on any point should not be accepted without great caution and sound judicial reasons. In re : Bachala Peda Somudu.

In a capital case, certain witnesses, who had stated before the Committing Magistrate that they had seen the accused striking the deceased, withdrew their statements before the Court of Sessions and gave evidence exculpating the accused. The Sessions Judge considering the evidence given before him by these witnesses to be untrue, and acting under S. 288 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, admitted in evidence the statements of these witnesses made before the Committing Magistrate: Held, that such statements were rightly admitted, and when admitted, were on the same footing as the other evidence on the record. *Dwarka Prasad v. In an enquiry before commitment, the witnesses for the prosecution were examined in a Hospital where the accused was lying. The accused declined to cross-examine the witnesses on the ground that he was unwell. The witnesses were again tendered for cross-examination and were cross-examined by the accused but the witnesses went back on their previous statements and supported the accused's statement: Held, that the statements made by the witnesses on the first hearing were duly recorded within the meaning of S. 228 and such of them as were transferred to the record of the Sessions Judge could be treated as evidence in the trial. *Muhammad Aslam v. Previous statements of witnesses are only ordinarily admissible to corroborate or contradict the witnesses who have made statements at the trial or by virtue of S. 288. The latter section should only be employed when there is reason to believe that a witness at the trial is deliberately departing from the evidence which he gave before the Magistrate on record as substantive evidence. As to corroborating a witness, it is unnecessary for the prosecution to corroborate their witnesses by previous statements until the statement made at the trial has been, in one way or another, challenged. As to contradicting a witness, it is not in accordance with law to use his statement made on a previous occasion, until the particular statement by means of which it is desired to contradict the witness, is put to him and he is asked what explanation he can give. In neither of these two latter cases is the previous statement itself substantive evidence. Abdul Jalil Khan v. Emperor.

The proper way to charge a Jury in a case under S. 368, Penal Code, is to place before the Jury the direct evidence of the knowledge of the accused as to the abduction, to point out the strength and weakness of that evidence, to tell the Jury that this is the only evidence relating to knowledge and then to place before them the circumstances, if any, which might raise an inference of knowledge on the part of the accused of the abduction, and lastly, to ask the Jury to draw their own conclusion on the question. *Gadadhar Sarkar v. ———S. 297—Charge—Omission to read material evidence.

An objection that in delivering his charge to the Jury, the Sessions Judge did not read material portions of the evidence is not in itself sufficient for the reversal of the verdict of the Jury. In each case it must be a question whether the omission to read the material portion of the evidence was such as to mislead the Jury and the Court of Appeal will not interfere if it has not prejudiced the accused. *Rahimbeg v. In certain cases where the accused are represented, the Court may, having regard to the elaboration and skill with which rival contentions are placed before the Jury by Counsel of both sides, make the charge not so elaborate but direct the Jury to take the arguments into consideration. But where in a Sessions Court an accused person is unrepresented, it is particularly necessary that the Judge while charging the Jury should bring to their notice the arguments which would have been used if he had been represented by a Pleader. *Mahomed Khan v. It is usual and most proper direction for a Judge to instruct the Jury that if they entertain reasonable doubt as to the guilt of any one of the accused, the Jury should give him the benefit of the doubt and acquit him, and that it ought, as a matter of practice, to be given in every case though the omission to give it may not, in every case, constitute a misdirection of such a character as to render conviction invalid. *Para Thandan v. Where a Judge in his charge to the Jury said: "The offences of rioting, culpable homicide, voluntarily causing grievous hurt and the provisions of Ss. 34, 149, Penal Code, are explained," and there was nothing to show that the Jury were told that a rioting can only take place when there is an unlawful assembly consisting of at least five men with one of the common objects mentioned in S. 141, Penal Code: Held, that the charge was most inadequate. *Abdul Sheikh v. A grave defect in the conduct of the defence case, caused by defective cross-examination by the Counsel for defence, cannot be remedied except by a re-trial if such re-trial is permissible under the law. Putting the accused's case to the Jury cannot possibly mean putting to the Jury every argument and comment of the Counsel for the defence. He must explain those particular sections of the Penal Code which apply to the particular case which the Jury are trying, and he ought to set out in the copy of the charge his explanation in sufficient detail to enable the High Court to ascertain whether he has properly explained the law. *Caribulla Sheikh v. —S. 297—Charge to Jury—Duty of Judge.Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 297

It is mandatory upon the Judge to charge the Jury, and in so doing, to sum up the evidence for the prosecution and the defence and to lay down the law. Puttan Hassan v. Emperor. (F.B.).

—S. 297—Charge to Jury—Duty of Judge.

It is quite open to the Judge, and indeed it is his duty to assist the Jury with his advice and certainly with his criticism provided that he warns them that it is their duty to make up their minds and he states to them that they are not bound by his expressions of opinion. *Hary Lal v. —S. 297—Charge to Jury—Duty of Judge.

Per Kulwant Sahoy, J.—In a complicated case the Judge in his charge to the Jury ought not only to explain the law but should also draw the attention of the Jury to the evidence in the case and explain how they should apply the law as explained by him to the particular facts of the case. He should explain to them what are the points which they ought to take into consideration in arriving at their verdict. Rupan Singh v. Emperor. 27 Cr. L. J. 49 : 91 I. C. 225 : 4 Pat. 626 : 7 P. L. T. 239 : A. I. R. 1925 Pat. 797.

—S. 297—Charge to Jury—Duty of Judge to explain law and sum up evidence.

A charge to the Jury must be in such a form as to enable the Appellate Court to be satisfied that it was delivered with sufficient fullness as regards the evidence on the record. It should be such as to enable the Appellate Court to say for itself that all points of law and fact were clearly and correctly explained to the Jury having regard to the evidence adduced in the case. Dwarika Das Bairagi v. Emperor. 30 Cr. L. J. 912 : 118 I. C. 351 : 33 C. W. N. 84 : I. R. 1929 Cal. 639 : A. I. R. 1929 Cal. 170.

—S. 297—Several accused—Charge to Jury—Duty of Judge.

Where several accused persons are being jointly tried and the case as against all of them does not stand on the same footing and their defences are also different, the Judge must ask the Jury to consider the case as against each of the accused individually. The Judge's failure to do so is a very serious omission and is likely to prejudice the accused persons. Khajiruddin v. Emperor.

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 297

———S. 297—Charge to Jury, essentials of—Expression of opinion—Necessity of marshalling facts and sifting evidence.

In a charge to the Jury it is not sufficient for the Judge merely to recount and repeat chronologically the evidence as it has been given in Court by the various witnesses. It is necessary to sift and weigh and value the evidence. Though the final weighing is, for the Jury, the Judge ought to see that all essential facts go into the scales of justice, and on the proper side of the balance. Further facts must be marshalled by the Judge under separate heads and in distinct compartments, as they affect each separate incident in the story, and the law should be stated in short and simple terms. A Judge, if he has got an opinion at all, ought to tell a Jury what it is, so long as he makes it clear that they are at liberty to regard or to disregard it as they pleased. A charge which succeeds in avoiding any expression of opinion must generally amount to a most colourless and unhelpful direction. Nagendra Nath v. Emperor.

———S. 297—Charge to Jury, essentials of.

In charging the Jury, it is not necessary for the Judge on every occasion on which he expressed his opinion on a point of fact to tell the Jury that they were sole Judges of questions of fact. It is sufficient if he makes that statement quite clearly to the Jury at the end of the charge. Sri Kishen v. Emperor.

———S. 297—Charge to Jury, essentials of.

It is essential that in the general observations which a Judge makes in the course of his charge to the Jury, he should be accurate within the limits of what has always been allowed from time to time in criminal trials. Though a Judge's charge to the Jury may be open to criticism, the verdict of the Jury ought not to be interfered with except where the charge taken as a whole cannot be supported. Ambar Ali v. Emperor.

———S. 297—Charge to Jury, essentials of—Material omission—Misdirection.

The failure of the Judge in a Sessions trial to present in his summing up to the Jury the First Information Report in its true perspective, which affects the complicity of the different accused persons to the offence, as also the credibility of the evidence given by some of the important witnesses in the case, constitutes a serious misdirection sufficient to vitiate the verdict of the Jury. The summing up contemplated by law is a fairly full and distinct statement of the evidence with such advice as to the legal bearing of that evidence and the weight which properly attaches to the several parts of it, as a sound judicial discretion would suggest. The Judge must formulate and specify simple issues for the consideration of the Jury, and collate the evidence pro and con bearing upon the issues in order to assist the Jury to arrive at a correct decision thereon. Merely summarising the evidence, examination-in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination of the different witnesses who have deposed at the trial and putting before the Jury all that has been said by the witnesses or by the lawyers appearing on the two sides, and huddling together important facts as well as trivial points without any attempt at discrimination instead of aiding the Jury only confuses them and does not comply with the object which the law has in view. Where there are several accused persons in a case, the strength or weakness of the evidence of the witnesses as against each accused individually should be pointed out to the Jury. Jessarat v. Emperor.

———S. 297—Charge to jury—F. I. R. misdirection about—Failure to produce defence—Absconding—Proper charge.

The first information is not evidence in the case. It is tendered by the Crown for such use as the defence may be able to make of it and to test the consistency of the prosecution evidence. The most use which a Judge can make of it is to say that although it gave a different account of the occurrence from that in the evidence, yet it can be reconciled with the evidence. It is misdirection on the part of the Judge to ask the jury to accept the statement in the first information in preference to the evidence in the case. Where the Judge thought it necessary to put the fact that no evidence was adduced for the defence prominently before the jury, he was bound to qualify it by pointing out to the jury that the defence was not bound to call any evidence, that they could rely on the prosecution evidence, as far as it could help them, and that they were entitled to the benefit. Where it was proved that after the alleged occurrence the accused and the villagers absconded, the Judge should point out to the jury that absconding is a matter which is equally consistent with innocence as with guilt and that it could only be considered in connection with the rest of the evidence and that it is in itself a circumstance of no weight. Asfar Sheikh v. Emperor. 11 Cr. L. J. 557 : 8 I. C. 52.

———S. 297—Charge to Jury—Heads of charge, contents of—Failure to record how law was explained—Evidence—Description of witness in deposition, whether part of deposition.

It is not sufficient for a Judge who tries a case to state in his record of the heads of charges to the Jury that he referred to certain sections of the Penal Code and explained to the Jury the law in regard to the offence. He should set out the directions which, in fact, he gave to them in respect of the law. But failure to record in the charge what actually the Judge's explanation of the law was would not vitiate a trial where it has not occasioned a failure of justice. A Court will not, therefore, order a re-trial on this ground if it is of opinion that if the Jury accepted the evidence of the prosecution, they were entitled to convict the accused of the offence charged. The name, parentage, age, residence and profession of a witness form part of the deposition on solemn affirmation and not part of the heading. Chotan Singh v. Emperor. 29 Cr. L. J. 804 :

———S. 297—Charge to Jury—Heads of charge, contents of.

The Judge is not required to make a verbal transcript of his summing up. It is only the heads of the charge that he is required to record. ———S. 297—Charge to Jury—Heads of charge, record of—Duty of Judge—Formulation of questions for Jury, whether proper.

The object of the heads of charge is to inform the High Court, should occasion arise, of what direction the Judge gave in law to the Jury and the nature of his summing up of the evidence not only for the prosecution, but also for the defence. The heads of charge are not intended to be an exhaustive detail of every particular which the Judge may have addressed to the Jury. The Judge is not bound to address himself in every particular and in every detail to every suggestion put forward by the defence. It is the duty of the Judge fairly and candidly to point out the main and salient features of the case from the point of view of the prosecution and of the defence, respectively. In doing so he is entitled to take into consideration the speeches made upon both sides by the Crown and by the prisoner's Counsel in considering his presentation of the evidence to the Jury. The heads of charge should record in an intelligible form and with sufficient fulness the points of law and the directions given by the Judge to the Jury, and the record should represent with accuracy the substance of the charge by the Judge. Where a record of the heads of the charge to the Jury shows sufficient material to enable the High Court to Judge what the Sessions Judge told the Jury and there are serious omissions in directing the Jury on the facts and the law which may have occasioned a verdict different to that which would have been otherwise given, the verdict cannot be upheld in appeal. An appellant who seeks to set aside the result of a trial by Jury has a task of considerable magnitude and must, to be successful, present a case of real substance. In a complicated case the formulation of specific questions for the Jury's reply at the conclusion of the delivery of the Judge's charge is helpful to the Jury and is useful in deciding the legal effect of the Jury's findings; but the formulation of such questions requires great care and the questions should be confined within the narrowest possible compass. In a large number of cases such procedure is not requisite as a simple finding of guilty or not guilty serves all necessary purposes. Rupan Singh v. Emperor. 27 Cr. L. J. 49 :

All that a Judge can properly state to the Jury is, how the evidence stands, whether in his opinion, it is credible, pointing out at the same time the points which especially tell in favour of the defence. It is not his duty to say that they may neglect any portion of the evidence. That is clearly a misdirection and against the provisions of the law, which says that the Jury are to give their verdict upon the whole of the evidence recorded. It is absolutely his duty to give a narrative and history of the case, and to place the facts and evidence in a clear manner before the Jury so as to enable them to grasp the details and come to a right conclusion. *Emperor v. In a case of murder, the mere fact that the accused persons do not admit that they were present at the time of the occurrence and do not raise a case of provocation or passion or something of that sort, does not render it unnecessary for the Judge to give the Jury a proper direction as to the exceptions mentioned in S. 300, Penal Code. The question in such a case is whether on any reasonable view of the facts certain of the exceptions can matter. If they can matter and if a proper direction is not given to the Jury with respect to them, then it is not open to the High Court in appeal to guess and gamble as to whether or not the Jury's verdict would have been different if such direction had been given. *Jahur Sheikh v. S. 297—Charge to Jury—Report of Chemical Examiner—Absconding.

A Sessions Judge should warn the Jury that before using the report of a Chemical Examiner they must be satisfied on the evidence that the substances examined were in fact what they were said to be; and that even if the Jury believed that the accused did abscond, absconding is not necessary or invariably incompatible with innocence. *Ofel Molla v. Ss. 297, 298—Charge to the Jury—Misdirection—Charge, inordinate length and involved nature of—Miscarriage of justice—Law, explanation of.

The duty of a Judge in charging a Jury in a criminal case is to make up his mind as to what the law is, and to tell the Jury what it is, as succinctly and clearly as he can; but to cite to the Jury a large number of cases which the Jury cannot possibly understand is calculated to confuse them and to lead to a miscarriage of justice. The practice of delivering to the Jury charges of inordinate length and involved nature, and of citing to them a string of cases, specially upon questions of a civil nature, disapproved. *Shyama Charan Chakravarti v. The Jury by a majority of four to one brought in a verdict of guilty and the Sessions Judge, though not agreeing with the verdict, accepted it on the ground that he was unable to say that it was perverse : Held, on a review of the evidence, (1) that the Judge's view of the case in favour of an acquittal was the better view and that it would have been well had he made a reference ; (2) that, as the Judge had made no reference, it must be considered whether there was any material misdirection in the charge to the Jury or whether, in a case in which three Muhammadans having been accused of sexual offences against a Hindu woman were placed on their trial before a Jury composed of 4 Hindus and 1 Muhammadan, the Judge gave the Jury sufficient assistance and guidance ; (3) that the Jury had not had the assistance which should have been given them by the Judge in such a case and that the accused must, therefore, be acquitted. *Ismail Sarkar v. The Jury having given a unanimous verdict of guilty, the accused were convicted by the Sessions Judge and they appealed against the order : Held, (1) that the observation of the Sessions Judge did not in any sense amount to "laying down the law by which the Jury are to be guided" within the meaning of S. 207, Cr. —Ss. 297, 537—Charge to Jury—Omission of Judge to explain to jury all essential elements of offence—Effect.

Under S. 297, it is the duty of the Judge to explain to the Jury all the essential elements of the offences charged against the accused and to give directions on the law so as to make the law clear in relation to the facts of the case and the evidence adduced. Even the mere reading of the sections to the Jury does not amount to an explanation of the law. Nor can the Judge rely on the fact that Advocates on both sides had explained the law to the Jury. The Judge must lay down the law by which the Jury is to be guided. This provision is imperative. It is the clear duty of the Judge to explain what is law or the essential requisites of an offence and what must be proved to constitute that offence. An important non-direction to the Jury or an omission to direct them on an important point, amounts to misdirection ; but S. 297 must be read along with the provisions of S. 537. It is necessary, however, that the misdirection should be such as to occasion failure of justice, such failure of justice as would vitiate the trial or proceedings. There is no ground for broadly assuming that if even a mandatory provision of the Code is infringed, the result in all cases must be to vitiate the trial irrespective of whether it has or has not occasioned failure of justice. Emperor v. Jhina Soma.

S. 297—Jury trial—Admissibility of evidence—Duty of Judge.

One of the duties of a Judge in a trial held with the aid of a Jury is to prevent the production of inadmissible evidence whether it is or is not objected to by the parties. The fact that the accused puts forward some particular ground for holding that certain evidence is not admissible does not relieve the Judge of his duty to look into all the circumstances in order to judge whether the evidence is admissible or not. In dealing with the question of the admissibility of a confession, the Judge is not concerned with the truth or falsity of the confession ; that is a matter entirely for the Jury. The Judge is only concerned with the question as to whether the confession is admissible in evidence. If the confession is voluntary, it is admissible. If prima facie it is false, inconsistent, improper or absurd, that might suggest that it is not voluntary. Even if the Judge is satisfied as to the truth of a confession but doubts its voluntary character, he is bound to exclude it under the law. Emperor v. Panchkari Dutt.

There is no prohibition in law forbidding a Judge to read to a Jury in his charge from a judgment. In practice, it is not desirable to read from several Law Reports: as it may have the effect of confusing the minds of lay men. But in explaining the dividing line between murder, and culpable homicide not amounting to murder, Judges have frequently read, in their charges, passages from some well-known judgment as accurately illustrating the distinction. The verdict of a Jury cannot be set aside on the ground of a mere misdirection on a point of fact, if such misdirection has not in fact occasioned a failure of justice. Where a Judge indicated to the Jury in cautious language that from his experience a certain explanation offered by a party was not an impossible one and ought to be considered by the Jury: Held, that this did not amount to a misdirection. *Ramdas Rai v. Where a Bench Magistrate summons a person to appear on a certain day at a stated hour and the party appears but the Bench does not sit till some hours thereafter and the party does not wait, it cannot be said there has been a failure to appear within the meaning of S. 247, Cr. The trial of a criminal case within the meaning of S. 403 begins, if not from the time accused is served with summons, at least as soon as the accused appears in Court. The word "tried" in the section does not import any decision of the case on the merits, and if in a summons case the accused is present and the complainant is absent, the dismissal of the case in default of the complainant operates as an acquittal of the accused and the accused cannot be prosecuted again for the same offence. *Yashoda v. ———S. 247, 403—Absence of complainant—Acquittal—Presence of accused, whether necessary.

The important matter for an order under S. 247, Cr. P. C., is the presence or absence of the complainant. It cannot be said that the accused must either be present or must have been summoned to Court. An order under S. 247 is a final order of acquittal which operates as a bar under S. 403 of the Code to the trial of the accused for the same offence. Kiran Sarkar v. Emperor.

An order dismissing a complaint in a summons case for default of appearance of the complainant under S. 247, Cr. P. C. amounts to an order of acquittal and not of discharge and the Magistrate in such a case has no jurisdiction to set aside the order even on good cause being shown for the complainant's non-appearance. An acquittal under that section does not stand on any different footing from an acquittal under other circumstances and the High Court, will not set aside the order of acquittal in revision except under very rare circumstances. An application or order for revival of a criminal case can only be made on the supposition that the case is over and not pending. A case which is pending cannot be revived. Under S. 247, Cr. P. —————S. 297—Misdirection—Duty of Prosecution—Reading matters prejudicial to accused—Duty of Judge to warn Jury against acting on such matters.

The accused was tried under S. 372, Penal Code, for the offence of selling a minor girl for immoral purposes and was acquitted. The accused was subsequently charged with having made use at the previous trial of a forged document showing that the girl was a minor. During this trial, the whole of the complaint which contained allegations of various matters highly prejudicial to the accused was read at the opening of the prosecution though the complaint was not subsequently filed in the case. The Judge did not caution the Jury against believing the allegations contained in the complaint. Further, evidence was adduced at the trial to show that in another litigation the girl's grandmother had in the presence of the present accused, given evidence as to the age of the girl and that the accused consequently knew that the girl was a minor. The Judge in referring to this evidence, said in the summing up that if the Jury were of opinion that the accused must have known that the girl was under 18, that would be a reason for concluding that he knew that the document was forged: Held, (1) that the Prosecution acted very unfairly in reading the whole of the complaint made at the previous trial and the omission of the Judge to caution the Jury against allowing their verdict to be influenced by the matters contained therein amounted to misdirection; (2) that it was not open to the Jury to conclude that the accused knew the document to be forged because he knew that the girl was under 18 or had heard a statement of her grandmother that, she was under 18, and the learned Judge's summing up on this point was a grave misdirection. *Padam Prosad v. ———S. 297 — Misdirection to Jury, what amounts to—Heads of charge, principles applicable, to preparation of—Functions of Judge and Jury.

Mere non-direction is not necessarily misdirection. Those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said, or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood. Every summing-up must be regarded in the light of the conduct of the trial and the questions which have been raised by the prosecution and defence, respectively. A Judge is not required under S. 367, Cr. P. C., to write out in extenso the charge which he addresses to the Jury, but he should set forth in writing the headings of his charge ; and such headings afterwards form part of the record of the proceedings in the trial before him. As the term "heads of charge" itself implies, the Judge must faithfully record the lines upon which he addressed the Jury, both on the evidence and on the law and the object of these heads of charge is to inform the High Court, should occasion arise, of what direction he gave in law to the Jury, and the nature of his summing-up of the evidence, not only for the prosecution but also for the defence. The headings of charge do not purport, nor are they intended by Statute, to be an exhaustive detail of every particular which the Judge may have addressed to the Jury. They should only record, in an intelligent form and with sufficient fullness, the points of law and the directions given by the Judge to the Jury. But in considering the language used, one must not parse the headings of charge as if it were an indictment. The method of expression and its form may be unsatisfactory, but if in substance one can see from the frame of the heads of charge what were the directions which the Judge gave to the Jury, and that they were right and proper, then there can be no ground of complaint, even though the phraseology and form adopted might be open to question. It is the sole function of the Judge to direct the Jury on all matters of law and the Jury must take their direction in law from the Judge. The Judge must present the main case for the prosecution and for the defence fully for the consideration of the Jury. Eknath Sahay v. Emperor.

When it is proved, or may be reasonably presumed, that the property in question is stolen property, the burden of proof is shifted, and the possessor is bound to show that he came by it honestly, and if he fails to do so, the presumption is that he is the thief or the receiver according to circumstances. I have already referred to the defence of these two accused. If the gentlemen of the Jury find that the accused have failed to account for their possession, then they may presume that the accused came by them dishonestly." Held, that the direction amounted to a serious misdirection inasmuch as (a) no presumption could arise under Illustration (a) to S. 114 of the Evidence Act with regard to property which could be merely presumed to have been stolen; (b) the burden of proof was throughout on the prosecution and could not be shifted, (c) the Jury were not properly directed that it was their duty to weigh all the circumstances of the case, consider the accused's explanation and then decide whether or not they should make the presumption laid down in the Illustration to the section. *Salga Charan Manna v. Where in a trial by Jury, the Judge fails to direct the mind of the Jury to a particular aspect of the case, or where he tells the Jury that the statement of one accused might be taken for what it is worth against a co-accused, this amounts to a misdirection sufficient to occasion a failure of justice and to vitiate the trial. *Suryya Kanta v. The omission of the Judge to do so amounts to a misdirection. It is also a misdirection on the part of the Judge, in a case where the whole of the evidence is circumstantial, to direct the Jury that they must not acquit the accused simply because in their opinion he may possibly not be guilty, but that they should do so if they think the prosecution evidence is for good reasons not satisfactory. *Ashraf Ali v. The accused were tried by the Sessions Judge and a Jury on charges under S. 465, 467 and 193, Penal Code, on the allegations that by personating one Mir Baksha, the husband of a certain woman; before the Muhammadan Marriage Registrar, they had induced the Registrar to make an entry of the divorce of the woman by her husband, to which entry they had affixed their thumb impressions, and thereby made a false document within the meaning of Ss. 463 and 464, Penal Code. In his charge to the Jury, the Sessions Judge said: "If the person who put his thumb impression in the register as Mir Bakhsha was not really Mir Bakhsha, it is clear that he made a false document, within the meaning of S. 464 and that his intention was that fraud should be committed and also that injury should be caused to Mir Bakhsha. He, therefore, committed forgery." Held, that there was a misdirection on the part of the Judge as he did not leave it to the Jury, as he should have done, to say whether on the evidence they found that the intention of the accused was dishonest and fraudulent, but as the verdict was not erroneous and was perfectly correct on the evidence, it should not be set aside. *Emperor v. Per Twomey, J.—When the facts appearing in a case are consistent only with an intention to cause death or to cause bodily injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the offence can only be murder and it would, in such a case, clearly be misleading to discuss culpable homicide done with any lesser criminal intention. In doubtful cases of murder, a Judge is bound to explain the law as to the minor offence of culpable homicide not amounting to murder as well as the major offence of murder. Per Parlett, J.—A judicial decision must be taken as arrived at under the particular circumstances of the case in which it was given and to govern another case only if its circumstances are similar. It is quite possible to explain fully and correctly what murder is without stating what it is not. A Court is bound to presume the absence of circumstances bringing the case within an exception unless and until the existence of these circumstances is proved or at least alleged. If there is material only for some of such circumstances but not others, it would not be right for a Judge to raise the applicability of the exception before the Jury, as by so doing he might mislead them into contravening S. 105 of the Evidence Act. Nga Mya v. Emperor.

The only express provision as to the duty of a Judge in charging a Jury is that in S. 297. It is not incumbent on a Judge to explain a part of the law to the Jury, which if they acted on, they would have gone wrong. Before a Judge leaves a case to the Jury for finding as to whether the accused's case comes within one of the exceptions to S. 300, Penal Code, there must be evidence, at least an allegation by the accused, on which they might reasonably and properly conclude the facts to be established. It is not the duty of a Judge to invent facts in the interests of the accused persons. Nga Mya v. Emperor.

—————S. 297—Sexual offences—Charge to Jury—Duty of Court.

In trials of charges of sexual offences where allegations of sexual offences are made by women against men, very often unsupported by any corroborative evidence, the Judge must warn the Jury that it is dangerous to convict the accused upon uncorroborated evidence of the woman alone. The Judge must direct the Jury upon the important question whether the girl's evidence ought to be accepted without corroboration, whether there was corroboration, what kind of corroboration it was, and whether it was, as is necessary, corroboration with regard to the offence itself and which implicates the accused. Where the Judge has failed to warn the Jury, the conviction cannot be allowed to stand. Taser Pramanik v. Emperor.

—————S. 297—Summing up—Duty of Judge—One-sided summing up, legality of—Mere reading of evidence in extenso, whether sufficient.

In summing up the evidence to the Jury it is not enough merely to read out the evidence in extenso. It is incumbent on the Judge to analyse the evidence and to place the case succinctly before Jury. A charge to the Jury which is entirely one-sided and calculated to suggest to the Jury that there is practically no doubt as to the main facts and that there is no use of considering the matter from any point of view other than presented by the prosecution is bad. Emperor v. Rajab Ali Fakir.

The fact that the evidence had been summarized at great length by both sides and the jury had taken notes from the arguments and had themselves made a complete summary of the evidence for their own convenience would not relieve the Judge from the duty of conforming to the provisions of S. 297, which distinctly lays down that he should sum up the evidence. *Abdul Razaak v. It would ordinarily be impossible for the Judge to cram into the charge the minute details which are more likely to obscure the issue and confuse the minds of the Jury rather than enable them to grasp the essentials of the case. Ss. 297 to 299, Cr. P. C. make it imperative on a Sessions Judge to place in his summing up to the Jury the evidence both for prosecution and defence. Therefore omitting to place before the Jury the evidence regarding the alibi set up by the defence when the question turned entirely upon the identity of the accused, and to sum up separately the evidence against the accused when many persons are involved, is a clear misdirection likely to prejudice the accused at their trial. The fact that the Vakils did not lay much emphasis upon the defence evidence is no reason why the Judge himself should not place it before the Jury. At the conclusion of a trial by Jury, the Jury brought in a unanimous verdict of culpable homicide not amounting to murder. The Judge questioned them as to which part of S. 304 of the Penal Code their verdict came under. Their answers revealed the fact that they did not at all understand the law applicable to the case and they requested the Judge to read out a passage to them from a certain reported judgment. The passage was read out and the Jury asked for permission to withdraw and consider their verdict again. They were allowed to do so and then brought in a unanimous verdict of murder which the Judge accepted: Held, that the first verdict of the Jury being incomplete and their answers to the Judge's questions having revealed the fact that they had arrived at no unanimous verdict under S. 304 of the Penal Code, it was the duty of the Judge to send them back for further consideration and that their second verdict being a unanimous and legal verdict, the Judge was bound to accept it. *Emperor v. Per Teunon, J.—In a trial by Jury the Judge's treatment of a confession, though one-sided to some extent, may not by itself be a sufficient misdirection to the Jury to necessitate a re-trial. The Judge's instruction to Jury to take into consideration against an accused statements of co-accused as their "confessions or confessional statements or confessions of a sort," when as a matter of fact those statements were not self-incriminating, amounts to a misdirection. It is misdirection for a Judge to leave it to the Jury to decide whether certain statements or confessions made by the accused and how much thereof are inadmissible in evidence. It is for the Judge to admit or exclude evidence in accordance with the law on the subject and for the Jury to weigh and value the evidence admitted. A Judge in his charge to the Jury should avoid, as far as may be, the use of expressions which assume the guilt of the accused and must not indulge in the use of slang or colloquial phrases. *Amiruddin v. In the case of a confession he must decide whether the confession is admissible in evidence or not, that is to say, he must consider whether it has been duly recorded and whether it is free from the infirmities mentioned in S. 24 of the Evidence Act. A charge to a Jury must be read as a whole. If there are salient propositions in law in it, these will, of course, be the subject of separate analysis. But in a protracted narrative of fact, the determination of which is ultimately left to the jury, it must needs be that the view of the Judge may not coincide with the views of others who look upon the whole proceedings in black type. It would, however, not be in accordance either with usual or with good practice to treat such cases as cases of misdirection, if, upon the general view taken, the case has been fairly left within the Jury's province. *Jagdish Dutt Shukla v. —S. 298—Charge to Jury—Misdirection and non-direction—Document admitted without objection—Execution, proof of, whether necessary—Failure to draw attention of Jury to presumption arising under Statute.

Where a document, which is not per se inadmissible, is admitted by the Court in a Criminal trial without formal proof of execution, and the accused having sufficient opportunity at the trial to call for formal proof omits to take any objection, he cannot afterwards, in appeal, impeach the verdict of the Jury on the ground that the document had been admitted without formal proof. The omission to draw the attention of the Jury to the provisions of S. 103-B of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the presumption arising therefrom does not constitute a serious error on the part of the Judge, where the point has been thoroughly discussed by Counsel and the Jury are under no misconception regarding it. Where there is no evidence of a particular matter, it would be an error on the part of the Judge to lay down the law to the Jury on the matter, which is not a matter legally and properly before the Jury. The ability of the Counsel engaged in the defence does not relieve the Judge of his task, which the law imposes upon him, of fully and fairly charging the Jury. At the same time it is reasonable that the Judge should take into account the elaboration and the skill of Counsel. Ram Bhagwan v. Emperor.

—S. 298 (1)—Confession—Function of Judge and Jury.

The question whether a confession is voluntarily made or not is a question of law, to be determined by the Court from the facts, as a condition precedent to their admission. Having been declared competent and admissible, they are before the Jury for consideration. The Jury have no authority to reject them as incompetent. But the Jury are the sole Judges of the truth and weight to be given to confessions as they are of any other fact. In weighing the confessions, the Jury must take into consideration all the circumstances surrounding them and under which they were made, including those under which the Court declared, as a matter of law, they were voluntary. While there is no power in the Jury to reject the confessions, as being incompetent, there is no power in the Court to control the Jury in the weight to be given to facts. The Jury may, therefore, in the exercise of their authority, and within their province, determine that the confessions are untrue, or not entitled to any weight, upon the grounds that they were not voluntarily made. Badan Ali v. Emperor (F. B.)

—S. 298—Directions to Jury—Benefit of doubt, direction by Judge as to, whether necessary.

In every charge to a Jury it is well to include therein a direction that the prisoner must always be given benefit of the doubt. But omission to give such a direction does not always render a conviction invalid. Sonia Koshti v. Emperor.

—S. 298—Duty of Judge—Charge to Jury—Misdirection—Confession—Voluntariness and admissibility to be decided by Judge—Truth or falsehood to be judged by Jury.

It is for the Judge to decide whether a confession was made voluntarily and is consequently admissible in evidence. He ought not, in any circumstances, to throw on the Jury the duty of saying whether a confession is voluntarily made or not. If the Judge finds that it was voluntarily made and was not caused by any threat or inducement, he may admit it and then it will be for the Jury to say —Duty of Judge to direct Jury to reject evidence of hostile witness—Misdirection.

Where a witness is declared hostile and leave is granted to the party calling him, to cross-examine him, it is necessary that the Judge should explain to the Jury what the position is that then arises, namely, that by asking for leave to cross-examine the witness, the party calling him admits that he is not a witness of truth and one whose evidence is not entitled to credit, who is prepared to make one statement on oath at one time and another at another time and the evidence of such a witness should be rejected and left out of account in the minds of the Jury. An omission on the part of the Judge to tell the Jury to reject the evidence of such a witness would amount to misdirection. Panchanau Gogai v. Emperor.

But the Judge must not tell the Jury that such or such witness does in fact corroborate the accused. That is the function of the Jury and depends upon whether they believe the witness or not. Though an omission to direct the attention of the Jury to those portions of evidence amounting to corroborative evidence would only be a non-direction, it is a misdirection if the Judge points out to the Jury certain portions of the evidence as fulfilling the requirements already stated, when in fact they do not do so. *Rebati Mohan Chakrabarti v. Where the Judge in his charge to the Jury says: "it is not part of your duty to decide whether the confession was made voluntarily or by reason of any inducement, threat, promise of Police torture", in so directing the Jury not to consider whether the confession was made voluntarily or not, he commits an error of law. It is the function of the Judge to decide whether there is prima facie evidence for admitting the confession. When the confession has been admitted by the Judge, it is the function of the Jury to consider its credibility and weight, and in considering the credibility and weight, the Jury are at liberty to consider all the circumstances of the case including those circumstances already proved before the Judge and to give the evidence such credibility as they think it deserves. *Badan Ali v. Evidence of an expert should be approached with considerable care and caution, specially where much depends upon such evidence. A Judge in charging a Jury should call the attention of the Jury to the nature and history of the case as laid before the Court by the prosecution. The question as to the identity of thumb-impressions on two or more documents, for the purpose of ascertaining whether the thumb-impressions are of one and the same person, is eminently a matter for the Jury and not for the Judge. Where, in a charge to the Jury, the Judge omits to call the attention of the Jury to the nature and history of the case as laid before the Court by the prosecution, to the fact that the evidence of an expert should be approached with considerable care and attention, and to the actual thumb-impression or mark on the document, execution of which was falsely admitted by a person, before a Sub-Registrar, by means of false personation, and gives his own opinion to the Jury upon the result of a comparison of thumb-marks, instead of leaving it to the Jury to form their own opinion, the charge is vitiated by misdirection and the accused may be prejudiced by such a charge. *Panchn Mondal v. —S. 298—Summing up—Misdirection, what constitutes—Judge simply stating his own opinion without adding safeguard that the Jury are at liberty to form their own opinion—Principles underlying summing up by Judge.

In the course of his summing up a Judge has a right to express his opinion, and if he expresses his opinion which is an unfair opinion and which prejudices the accused, the superior Appellate Court can and should interfere to remove the ill-consequences of such action by finding misdirection; but to this clear and sound rule of law it is not necessary to add the condition in effect that every word that the Judge says wherein he expresses his opinion should be qualified by most elaborate safeguards. It would not be in accordance either with usual or good practice to treat a case of misdirection, if, upon the general view taken, the case has been fairly left within the Jury's province. If the Judge attempts to take the case out of the Jury's province by something in the nature of imposing his own view upon the Jury, it is a case of misdirection, but if a Judge simply states his opinion which the law allows him to state in such a manner that intelligent Jurymen should see for themselves that it is only his opinion and nothing else, it is not necessary for him to add as a safeguard a remark that it is only his opinion and that the Jury are perfectly at liberty to form their own. On questions of fact Judge's opinion in no way binds the Jury but the Judge has a right to express it so that the Jury may know what it is. Des Raj v. Emperor.

—S. 299—Duty of Judge—Functions of Jury—Confession, voluntary nature of—Misdirection.

Under S. 299 the Jury must weigh and value the evidence admitted by the Judge and in order to do so, they also must themselves go into the question as to whether a confession admitted in evidence was made voluntarily, for a free and voluntary statement is some guarantee of its truth. It is, therefore, the duty of the Judge to place before the Jury the facts and circumstances, pro and con, with regard to the question whether a confession was voluntary or not and to ask them to form their own conclusions as to the character of the confession. Where the consideration of the question as to whether a confession is voluntary or not is taken away entirely from the Jury, it amounts to a serious omission sufficient to vitiate the verdict of the Jury. *Sheikh Abdul v. —Ss. 299, 307—Jury trial—Disagreement between Judge and Jury—Reference to High Court—High Court, duty of—Verdict, unanimous, when to be interfered with.

In dealing with a case under S. 307, Cr. P. C., the High Court is first called upon to consider the entire evidence. It has then to give due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and to the opinion of the Jury and then to acquit or convict the accused. The opinion of the Sessions Judge, however, is his opinion on the merits of the case and does not include his speculations as to what external considerations, if any, might have affected the judgment of the Jury. An imputation of this character is not fair to the Jurors as they have no opportunity to defend their views and to repudiate the aspersions made against them. The opinion of the Jury signifies the verdict of the Jury. The measure of the relative weight to be attached to these two factors, cannot be crystallised into an inflexible formula. The answer must depend upon the circumstances of each case. But the trend of judicial opinion has been in favour of preference of the unanimous verdict of Juries on whom the duty is imposed by S. 299 to decide which view of the facts is true. The weight to be attached to the verdict of the Jury is, however, necessarily diminished when the verdict is not unanimous. On the other hand when the Judge accepts the verdict of the Jury as to some of the accused and not as to the others, his opinion is weakened in a corresponding measure. The High Court should not, however, interfere with a unanimous verdict of the Jury unless it can say decidedly that it thinks that the verdict is clearly wrong. Notwithstanding this, due weight must be given to the opinion of the Sessions Judge as required by Statute. Emperor v. Dhananjay Ray. 25 Cr. L. J. 758 :

—S. 299—Misdirection to jury.

It is a material misdirection to the jury to tell them to leave out of consideration the evidence of a witness and the retracted confession of the accused. It should be left to the jury to act upon the evidence or not as they think right. As regards the retracted confession, the jury should have been told that they should consider in view of all the circumstances in the case, whether the confession, or the statement retracting it, was true and act accordingly. *Public Prosecutor v. Under S. 299, Cr. P. C., the Jury alone has the power to determine the question of fact whether the accused committed the offence under S. 307 or S. 325, or S. 323, Penal Code. When this aspect of the question is not explained to the jury, the Judge exceeds his jurisdiction in convicting the accused under S. 323 : Held, that if the Jury's verdict had been one of not guilty even in respect of the minor offence and the Judge was unable to accept that verdict, the proper course would have been to submit the case under S. 307 to the High Court. *Gangabisan v. In the trial, the jury after retiring, returned the ambiguous verdict "Guilty of stabbing, but without the intention of committing murder." The learned Judge presiding, instead of questioning the Jury under the provisions of S. 303, Cr. P. C. read to them certain parts of Ss. 299 and 300, Penal Code, and sent them back to consider further, with instruction to return a verdict of "Guilty," or "Not Guilty of murder." The Cr. P. C. does not permit the recording of what is known in English law as a 'special verdict,' i. e., where the Jury state their findings on the facts themselves, leaving it to the Judge to apply the law to those facts and himself find the prisoner guilty or not guilty. A Judge is not entitled to ask the Jury the reasons for their verdict. He is not entitled to put questions to them to show that the conclusions at which they arrived were not logical or consistent. Any ambiguity in the Jury's verdict is the only justification for any question by the Judge. Where the Jury give their findings only on the facts, leaving it to the Judge to apply the law to those facts, the Judge is empowered to require the Jury to return a verdict of "guilty" or "not guilty." *Arunachella Thevan v. Proper precautions should be taken by a Judge who presides over the Court in a Jury trial to make it impossible, after the charge has been delivered and the Jury have retired to consider their verdict, for any one other than a juror to speak with the Jury or communicate with the Jury without the leave of the Court. *Benimadhab Kundu v. In a case of criminal breach of trust in respect of a sum of over seven thousand rupees, the Jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty but recommended the lightest punishment consistent with justice, as in their opinion, the amount misappropriated by the accused was much less than the amount stated in the charge. As to the amount embezzled, they were not unanimous and they said they were not able to ascertain it definitely but the majority of them were of opinion that it might be a thousand rupees or so out of the amount mentioned in the charge. The Judge agreed in the verdict. He, however, was of opinion that the amount embezzled was not a thousand rupees or so but nearly rupees five thousand. He accepted the verdict and convicting the accused under S. 408, Penal Code, sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for three years. On Appeal: Held, (1) that the verdict returned by the Jury was not a simple verdict of guilty or not guilty on the whole matter covered by the charge but a special or qualified verdict, to ascertain the exact scope and import of which it was the duty of the Judge to ask the Jury such questions as were necessary; (2) that the Judge should have endeavoured to ascertain how the Jury arrived at the amount of "about a thousand rupees or so" which, in their opinion, the accused was guilty of having embezzled. *Khirode Kumar Mukerji v. Acquittal under S. 247, Cr. P. C., though not an acquittal on the merits, has the force of a complete acquittal for all purposes. A fresh and a separate trial on the same facts would be barred under S. 403, Cr. P. C. Where reference under S. 438 is received asking for interference against an order of acquittal, the High Court is very reluctant to accept such a reference. In cases of acquittal, the Provincial Govt. has a right of appeal. If the Provincial Govt. does not choose to file an appeal and if a reference is made asking the High Court to interfere with an order of acquittal, the High Court will interfere only if there be radical and incurable irregularity or a complete disregard of the law and procedure or a manifest injustice which has got to be cured. *Emperor v. —Ss. 33, 58—Miscellaneous—Court, duty of, while admitting statement of absent witness—Irregularity—Misdirection.

Under S. 33, Evidence Act, the Judge has to satisfy himself that the presence of the witness cannot be obtained without an amount of delay or expense which he considers to be unreasonable, before he admits a statement made by the absent witness in a previous judicial proceeding. It is not enough to have the statement of the Public Prosecutor to that effect, there must be independent evidence before him before he can exercise the powers given to him under the Evidence Act. Therefore, where a Judge acts upon the statement of the Public Prosecutor, his procedure is irregular. In a trial by Jury, reception of inadmissible evidence by the Judge and his failure to warn the Jury against considering such evidence, amounts to mis-

Where S. 73 says that the Court may direct any person present in Court to write, the procedure of delegating to another Magistrate not sitting as a Court, to take such a writing from the accused when the accused is not in Court nor standing his trial in Court, does not come within the provisions of the section. *Kishori v. -----S. 73—Interpretation.

The word "purports" in S. 73, Evidence Act, means "alleged." It is not necessary under the section that the writing, which is in dispute, must itself in terms express or indicate that it was written by the person to whom it is attributed. When an anonymous writing is produced and ascribed by the prosecution to a particular person, then the case for the prosecution must be taken to be that, having regard to the admitted documents, and the comparison between them and the disputed writing, the prosecution alleges that the disputed document purports to have been written or made by the accused. An anonymous writing ascribed to a particular person may, therefore, be compared under S. 73, Evidence Act. Emperor v. Ganpat Balkrishna Rode.

A statement taken under S. 164, Cr. P. C., does not need to be "adduced," for it already forms part of the record and may be referred to by the Court as such, and so the question, whether if it is not put on the record, it could be referred to as part of the evidence or not, cannot arise. *Emperor v. The meaning of S. 30 (1), Excise Act, is that a man may possess 12 quarts of foreign spirit without reference to any other kind of spirit or liquor in his possession. The section permits a man to possess without pass or licence 12 reputed quart bottles of foreign spirit, 12 reputed quart bottles of foreign fermented liquor, one reputed quart bottle of country spirit and 4 reputed quart bottles of country fermented liquor, all at the same time. Cl. (a) of S. 30 (2) cannot mean that a man may keep foreign spirit for his private use without a pass or licence only if he has no foreign fermented liquor in his possession at the same time. The accused, a well-to-do Chinaman, who could afford to buy one to two hundred rupees worth of liquor for festive occasions was charged with possessing a large quantity of brandy and beer when the annual Chinese festival was in fact near at hand : Held, that the accused was prima facie entitled to the benefit of the exception contained in Cl. (a) of S. 30 (2). Emperor v. Gu Wa. 12 Cr. L. J. 581 : 12 I. C. 845 : 4 Bur. L. T. 146.

———Ss. 39 (2) and 3 (1) (n)—‘Private use,’ meaning of—Prohibition against possession of spirits and liquor in excess of specified quantities not applicable to possession for private use.

Sub-s. 2 of S. 30, Excise Act, enacts that the prohibition against possession of any quantity in excess of specified quantities of spirits and liquor does not extend to the possession of foreign spirits or foreign fermented liquor, purchased by a person for his private use and not for sale. The words “private use” are not confined to the meaning of personal consumption. If an accused alleges that any foreign spirit or any foreign fermented liquor in his possession is for his private use and not for sale, it is for the prosecution to show that he has it for sale. Mere possession of quantities in excess of those specified in Cl. (n) of Sub-s. 1 of S. 3 Act is not sufficient to justify a conviction. Emperor v. Lipyin.

EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

———S. 105—Burden of proof—Meaning of.

S. 105 enacts that the burden of proving the existence of circumstances bringing the case within any General or Special Exception in the Penal Code, shall lie upon the accused, and the Court shall presume the absence of such circumstances. In this section the phrase 'burden of proof' is clearly used in its second sense, namely, the duty of introducing evidence. The major burden, that of establishing on the whole case the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt, never shifts from the prosecution. Emperor v. Damapala. (F. B.)

The duty of the accused under S. 105 is to introduce such evidence as will displace the presumption of the absence of circumstances bringing the case within an exception and will suffice to satisfy the Court that such circumstances may have existed. The burden of the issue as to the non-existence of such circumstances is then shifted to the prosecution which has still to discharge the major burden of proving on the whole case the guilt of the accused beyond reasonable doubt. *Emperor v. The phrase 'burden of proof' is used in two distinct meanings in the law of evidence, namely, the burden of establishing a case, and the burden of introducing evidence. In a criminal trial, the burden of proving everything essential to the establishment of the charge against the accused lies upon the prosecution, and that burden never changes. But it would clearly impose an impossible task on the prosecution if the prosecution were required to anticipate every possible defence of the accused and to establish that each such defence could not be made out, and of this task the prosecution is

The accused, a Kaviraj, was convicted under S. 53, Eastern Bengal and Assam Excise Act for manufacturing and selling an excisable article, namely, a mixture called Kameswar Modak which contains bhanga. The defence of the accused throughout was that the article in question was a bona fide medicated article prepared by him for medicinal purposes: Held, that the accused was protected by S. 72 of the Act. *Satish Chandra Roy v. ———S. 106—Facts known to others also—Applicability.

S. 106, Evidence Act, contemplates facts which in their nature are such as to be within the knowledge of the accused and of nobody else. It has no application to cases where the fact in question, having regard to its nature, is such as to be capable of being known not only by the accused but also by others if they happened to be present when it took place. The section cannot be invoked to make up for the inability of the prosecution to produce evidence of circumstances pointing to the guilt of the accused. Where facts proved by evidence give rise to the inference of guilt, unless rebutted, it is not the result of the application of S. 106, but of the probative force of such facts. *Ram Bharosey v. ———S. 106—Scope.

S. 106, Evidence Act, is not intended to be used to place upon the accused the burden of proving their innocence. S. 106 is not a proviso to the rule that the burden of proving the guilt of the accused is upon the prosecution but on the contrary, the section is subject to that rule. The burden of proving a particular fact or a particular defence is a different matter. S. 106 does not enable the Judge to say to the Jury that the accused must explain this or that, or he must satisfy them on this point or that or be found guilty. Shevaram Jethanand Shivdasani v. Emperor. 41 Cr. L. J. 28 :

———Ss. 106, 105—Nature of proof.

Under S. 106, Evidence Act, when a person does an act with some intention other than which the character and circumstances of the act suggest, the burden of proving that intention is upon him. Consequently, if a person wants to plead that he fired at the Police in order that he might be able to escape arrest, then it is for him to state that in his examination either before the Committing Magistrate or in the Court of Session and to adduce evidence in support of that statement. The fact that the shots sizzled past over the heads of the Policemen and did not cause hurt to any one will not go to prove that the accused did not commit the offence under S. 307, Penal Code. Emperor v. Munshi. 37 Cr. L. J. 787 :

The failure of the prosecution to prove satisfactorily the transmission of parcels containing incriminating exhibits (i.e., blood-stained clothes) direct to the Chemical Examiner, and to prove that the articles received by that officer are the identical ones referred to at the trial, is not a mere technical defect. In important matters of this kind, it is essential for the prosecution to show that ordinary diligence was exercised and that the ordinary procedure followed. Muhammad Din v. Emperor. 26 Cr. L. In a case of forgery where the chief evidence against the accused consists of the comparison made by an expert of the forged document with documents proved to be in the accused's handwriting, the question whether the standard writings compared by the expert are properly proved is a matter of great importance. In cases where a conclusion is based regarding the authorship of a forged document, on a comparison of handwriting, the expert should generally be able to point to marked peculiarities in the ordinary writing of the accused, which are reproduced in the forged document, the accused being unable to avoid them. A conviction should not ordinarily be based on the mere evidence afforded by a comparison of handwriting by an expert without substantial corroboration. There may be cases in which the peculiarities in the handwriting of a person are so numerous and striking and there are so many mannerisms of the forger that he is unable to avoid in committing his forgery, that the Court may safely conclude on expert evidence alone that the writing is that of a particular person. ———S. 114—Corroboration—Extent of.

The extent of corroboration which a Court will demand will naturally vary with the circumstances of each case, including the character and antecedents of the approver and the degree of suspicion attached to his evidence. Hakam Singh v. Emperor.

———S. 114—Corroboration—Nature of.

A rule of law is not the same thing as a rule of prudence. The rule of law is contained in S. 114, Evidence Act, which lays down that the Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. To say that an accomplice is to be corroborated in material particulars is not the same thing as to say that he is to be corroborated by a witness who is not an accomplice. No doubt it is a rule of prudence to say that ordinarily evidence which is itself tainted should not be accepted as corroboration of tainted evidence. But it is opposed to all common sense to lay down that in a case, the circumstances of which show that the rule of prudence does not apply, the Court is precluded from acting on evidence which it believes to be true. Bimal Krishna Biswas v. Emperor.

———S. 114—Corroboration—Nature of.

But all that the rule requires is that an accomplice's story be corroborated by independent testimony proceeding from a source other than the approver and that such testimony should tend to implicate the accused, and the confirmation of the accomplice's story does not mean that there should be independent evidence of the accomplice's account of the crime itself. Corroboration need not be such as would in itself be sufficient to furnish a basis for conviction. Barkati v. Emperor.

The accused held a licence under the Explosives Act to manufacture gun-powder, containing a condition that the explosive shall be manufactured in a tent or lightly constructed building exclusively appropriated for the purpose. The accused constructed a building which complied with this condition. One of his servants employed by him to manufacture gun-powder took the necessary ingredients from this building to the accused's house and performed part of the process of manufacture there. An explosion occurred and the servant and another were injured. On a trial for breach of the conditions of the licence: Held, that inasmuch as the servant was acting in the course of her employment and inasmuch as the Statute imposed an absolute liability on the holder of the licence, the accused was guilty. *Emperor v. For the purposes of S. 8, Explosives Act, IV of 1884, the word "occupier" means a person who was in actual occupation of the premises and control of the operations in progress there. The section imposes an obligation on the occupier to give notice of the accident forthwith. It must, therefore, refer to an individual who is actually on the spot and in charge of the factory. An occupier for the purposes of the Factories Act may include an owner if the owner is in actual possession of the factory. In any case when the owner appoints a manager and puts him in charge of the factory, both the owner and the manager cannot be regarded as being occupiers. The person who answers that description is the manager. Gopal Ambadas Chawre v. Emperor.

Where a Judge is doubtful and is distinctly of the opinion that the benefit of the doubt should be given to the accused, then certainly he is of the opinion that the verdict of the Jury should be that he is not guilty. If corroboration in material particulars connecting any of the accused with the offence is forthcoming, the approver's testimony can be used against the accused person concerned. But without such corroboration, the mere implication of 'an accused' person by two approvers would not enhance the value of their testimony as against that person. Hakam Singh v. Emperor.

The question as to whether or not a statement of an approver should be taken into consideration or should be totally rejected, is one which will depend on the circumstances of each case. Beyond reiterating the law on the subject, which is to the effect that the statement of the approver must be very thoroughly scrutinized and should not be accepted unless it is corroborated by other independent evidence in the case, no hard and fast rule can be enunciated which will govern all cases. *Bhola Nath v. —S. 114—Evidence of approver, value of.

There is no statutory prohibition against accepting the evidence of an approver and condemning to death another person upon his uncorroborated testimony. But as a rule of practice, it is extremely dangerous to do so, especially where such evidence, when examined, is obviously open to criticism from the point of view of possible mistake or intentional concealment or misrepresentation. The confession of a criminal who has confessed his guilt in so far as it implicates other persons besides himself, must be treated as very little, if at all, superior in value to that of an accomplice who has received a pardon, and, therefore, where the Court has a witness belonging to each of these classes, the testimony of one cannot be treated as a corroboration of the testimony of the other unless both of them survive the test which can reasonably be applied to witnesses, so that in the result, the Court can say with confidence that neither

Being found in the company of the approver shortly after a dacoity, is very strong indication of fellowship in the crime. The evidence of witnesses that they identified such and such accused first at the identification parades and then in Court, is valueless where the prosecution fails to prove conclusively that there was no possibility for the witnesses to have seen the features of the accused before he was placed in the paradas. *Sahai Singh v. As a general rule, there is a presumption that an accomplice is unworthy of credit, unless he is corroborated in material particulars. The existence of general hostility, general enmity and a desire, however strong, or a motive, however effective, to procure the death of another person may be a piece of circumstantial evidence, but is not corroboration of a statement of participation in a particular crime. Corroboration must point indubitably to the identification of the person charged with the particular act with which the direct evidence connects him.

As a rule, the statement of a co-accused ought not to be relied upon without sufficient corroboration on material points. The evidence of a witness, who retracts his statement in the cross-examination, cannot be safely relied upon against an accused person unless there are very strong reasons for holding that the second statement is absolutely false. The Court cannot rely upon a mere probability in a criminal case. Shah Alim v. Emperor.

———S. 114, III. (b) — Evidence of accomplice—Corroboration, necessity of.

The rule requiring independent corroboration in material particulars of the evidence of an accomplice is only a rule of caution, which for a long time, has been adopted as a rule of practice by the Courts in England as well as in India, and is now virtually a rule of law. The reason underlying the rule is that the testimony of an accomplice is regarded as tainted evidence and it is, therefore, considered unsafe to base a conviction on it unless there is independent corroboration forthcoming. On the same principle, corroboration is insisted upon in the case of the evidence of informers. The evidence of an accessory after the event suffers more or less from the same taint as the evidence given by an accomplice. It would be very unsafe to accept the solitary evidence of such a person as proving the guilt of the accused without independent corroboration in material particulars. Emperor v. Kalloo.

A statement of an accomplice cannot be accepted as proof against an accused person without corroboration in material particulars. In dealing with the evidence of an accomplice it must be remembered that it is easy for a, single-handed murderer or suspect to make up a plausible story implicating another person along with himself in the commission of a crime, especially when that other person is not present when the story is first told. Before the story of an accomplice in a murder case can be safely accepted, his statement with regard to the date and occasion of the death of the deceased must be corroborated. *Feroze Khan v. S. 114 should be read along with S. 130, Evidence Act, in order to determine the manner in which the testimony of an accomplice should be dealt with before basing a conviction on his evidence alone. Though the Evidence Act does not require the Judge to make a presumption of the untrustworthiness of an accomplice's evidence, the proper course for the Court to follow is to make the presumption unless there be special occasion for not doing so. This does not deprive the Court of the right given by the Legislature to exercise its discretion. The corroborative evidence of witnesses that the assembling of the accused at a particular well was always followed by a theft is not sufficient corroboration where none of the witnesses ever reported to the Police at the time of the occurrence of any one of the thefts that it was preceded by a meeting of the accused at a particular well. *Munshi v. Evidence relating to the recovery of alleged stolen articles from the possession of an accused person, which is itself suspicious and unsatisfactory, cannot be treated as corroborating the evidence of an approver involving that accused person in the commission of an offence of dacoity. The house of a person accused of dacoity was searched in his absence and certain stolen articles were alleged to have been recovered. The accused was given no opportunity of checking the result of the search or giving any explanation as to how the articles came into the house. There was no evidence as to where the respective articles were found nor as to who produced them : Held, that the evidence as to the search was unsatisfactory and could not be used as corroboration of the approver's statement incriminating the accused. *Saudagar Singh v. ———S. 114, III. (b)—Scope.

S. 114, illustration (b), Evidence Act, is meant to embody a rule of practice which deserves all the reverence of law, viz., that no respect ought to be paid to the testimony of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated in some material circumstances, and the corroboration ought to consist of the circumstances that affect the identity of the party accused. Such evidence should not, as a rule, be accepted, except in very exceptional cases. Persons who actually pay bribes or co-operate in such payment or are instrumental in the negotiations for the purpose are accomplices of the person bribed and their testimony should not be accepted without independent corroboration. The evidence of one accomplice is not sufficient corroboration of the evidence of other accomplices, and previous statements made by an accomplice are not such corroboration of his evidence in Court as to satisfy the requirements of the rule requiring an accomplice's evidence to be corroborated. In re : Vyasa Rao. 12 Cr. Under S. 114, Evidence Act, the Court may, if the circumstances justify it, draw a presumption of guilt against a person who is in possession of stolen property; but the section does not lay down that whenever a person is in possession of stolen goods, a presumption of his guilt automatically arises. The III. (a) itself shows that the presumption will not arise unless the accused is in possession of the goods soon after the theft and unless he is unable to account for his possession. *Giyān Chandra v. Courts should not ordinarily depart from the well-recognized practice of accepting the evidence of an approver as against an accused person only when it is corroborated in material particulars by other independent evidence. It is the more necessary to follow this rule where the accused belong to a low class and it is a matter of no difficulty for the approver to include the name of any person of that class among the offenders, even though he had no connection with the offence and it might be difficult for him to establish his innocence. In exceptional cases Courts might, for reasons stated, act upon the evidence of an approver as a whole, though uncorroborated in particular details by independent evidence. *Ghulam Rasul v. ———S. 118—Who may testify.

If the witness is found to be incapable of understanding the obligations of an oath or affirmation, he may be examined without an oath or affirmation, provided he is found to be a competent witness. These facts may be noted, so that the record may show that before taking the statement of a witness of that character, the trial Court had ascertained that the witness was a competent witness under S. 118, Evidence Act, and that the omission to administer an oath or affirmation was due to his want of understanding the obligations of an oath. A distinction should be drawn between questions which a witness cannot be compelled to answer and those which he cannot be permitted to answer. The latter class of questions might properly be forbidden but questions of the former class are in no way barred; a witness has merely the right of refusing to answer such questions, without any hostile inference being drawn from his refusal. The most, therefore, that a Magistrate can do, in the case of a witness who is ignorant of his privilege, is to warn him that he need not answer. But if the witness elects to waive his privilege of refusing to answer, his answer is admissible in evidence. Mahomed Ali v. Emperor.

occasions on oath, his statement is not a very strong basis for a conviction though undoubtedly legally it can be such. The approver who has changed his statement, stands in a very much worse position than an ordinary approver. Some very strong corroboration, therefore, would be necessary before it would be safe to accept his previous version as true. In the absence of the test of cross-examination, the confessions of the co-accused cannot be considered to be sufficient corroboration. Faqir Singh Sudh Singh v. Emperor.

It cannot be laid down as a matter of law that the evidence of witnesses who support the statement of an approver is not corroborative evidence merely because their evidence was known to the Police before the approver was examined by them. It can, however, be urged in such a case that the approver's evidence should not be believed because he might have been tutored by the Police to make a statement fitting in with the evidence of the other witnesses. In re: Ibrahim.

The Sessions Judge, disagreeing with the verdict, made a reference to the High Court under S. 307 on the ground inter alia that the statement of the Foreman showed that the majority of the jury had accepted the evidence regarding the factum of the dacoity and also the evidence identifying the articles found in the accused's shop with articles stolen by the dacoits.

—S. 123—Privilege under S. 123—
Procedure to be followed by Head of Department.

The law requires that before privilege is claimed, the Head of the Department should have the document in front of him, should give his attention to the matter, should weigh carefully whether the privilege should or should not be claimed and unless he is satisfied that affairs of State are concerned, he should not claim privilege for a document or withhold from a Court the means of judging whether a particular witness's statement is true or not true. It is true that the Head of a Department has an absolute privilege on the point, it is for him to decide whether the matter is one in which privilege should be claimed or should not be claimed, but it would be good to follow the practice of the English Law, namely that some indication should be given to the Court as to why privilege is claimed or what affairs of State are involved in the matter. Without such indication, there is always a danger that the Court may draw an adverse inference from the non-production of the document. The Court is entitled according to the circumstances of each particular case to draw an inference adverse to the party claiming the privilege.

EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

———S. 133—Uncorroborated testimony of approver—Conviction on—Legality of.

It is not safe to base a conviction upon the evidence of an approver who is deeply interested in putting responsibility for the offence upon shoulders other than his own, unless there is some independent evidence to corroborate his story in material particulars. Chanan Singh v. Emperor.

S. 133, Evidence Act, should be considered along with Illustration (b) to S. 114. Except in circumstances of an especial nature, it is the duty of the Court to raise the presumption that an accomplice's evidence is unworthy of credit as against the accused persons, unless it is corroborated in material particulars and the failure of a Judge to direct the Jury to that effect is an error in law. It will nonetheless be an error in law if the trial was held without a Jury and the Judge or Magistrate misdirected himself on this point and treated an accomplice's evidence like that of any other witness. Any especial circumstances that may justify a disregard of this rule must be especially set out and considered. The corroboration must relate not only to the crime but also to the identity of the prisoner. Muthukumaraswami Pillai v. Emperor.

———Ss. 133, 3, 114, III. (b)—Accomplice—Evidence of—Corroboration.

It is not necessary that the story of an accomplice should be corroborated in every detail of the crime, nor is it necessary that the corroborative evidence should itself be enough for conviction; if that were so, the evidence of the accomplice would not be needed at all. When it is established that there are good grounds for believing the accomplice's story by reason of the existence of corroboration on material points implicating any of the accused, the Court can safely come to a conclusion as to the truth of the whole story on uncorroborated points so far as they implicate the same accused persons. Gafoor v. Emperor.

———Ss. 133, 4, 114, III. (b)—Evidence of accomplice—Value of.

S. 133, Evidence Act, is the only absolute rule of law as regards the evidence of accomplices. But there is a rule of guidance to which the Court also should have regard; that rule of guidance is to be found in III. (b) to S. 114, Evidence Act. S. 114 of the Evidence Act enacts a rule of presumption; and read with S. 4 of the Act, it indicates that this is not a hard and fast presumption, incapable of rebuttal, a praesumptio juris et de jure. The right to raise this presumption as to an accomplice is sanctioned by the Act; and it would be an error of law to disregard it, what effect is to be given to it must be determined by the circumstances of each case. The evidence of the accomplice requires to be accepted with a great deal of caution and scrutiny, because among other things, he is likely to swear falsely in order to shift the guilt from himself. But this consideration hardly applies to the evidence of one who testifies that he has bribed the accused, for, by his own testimony, so far from shifting the offence from himself, he in fact thereby fastens it upon himself, for it is by making himself out to be a briber that he shows another has been bribed. The corroboration to the evidence of an accomplice, when required, should be such corroboration in material particulars as would induce a prudent man, on the consideration of all the circumstances, to believe that the evidence is true not only as to the narrative of an offence committed but also so far as it affects each person thereby implicated. Emperor v. Shrinivas Krishna.

3 Cr. L. J. 33 :

———Ss. 133, 114 Illus.—Evidence of accomplice—Corroboration—Nature of.

Corroboration means independent testimony. Where it is required, it is necessary because the evidence sought to be corroborated is in some way unreliable. When in the case of an accomplice it is desirable because the accomplice's evidence comes from a tainted source, the nature of the corroboration required is not mere evidence of a tainted kind but fresh evidence of an untainted kind. Nga Aung Pe v. Emperor.

In the illustrations to S. 114, Evidence Act, it is pointed out that the Court may presume that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. If special circumstances exist which render it safe in an exceptional case to act upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice and upon that alone, the Court will not merely for before it. No sound distinction can be drawn between the duty of the Judge when objection is taken by the responsible officer of the Crown, or by the party, or when, no objection being taken by any one, it becomes apparent to him that a rule of public policy prevents the disclosure of the documents or information sought. *Wamanrao v. Where certain Railway servants were charged with theft and the accused called for certain statements made to the Station Master by the prosecution witnesses in a preliminary inquiry conducted by the Station Master and the Divisional Superintendent to whom the Station Master had forwarded the statements, pleaded privilege under S. 124, Evidence Act : Held, that the statements were not privileged as they were not made to the Station Master 'in official confidence' within the meaning of S. 124, Evidence Act. If a public officer to whom communications are made in official confidence considers that the public interest would suffer by their disclosure, such communication could not be produced in evidence. But if it is not established that they were made in official confidence, the opinion of the officer before whom they were made is not relevant. Emperor v. Bhagwati Prasad.

S. 133, Evidence Act, lays down the rule of law regarding the testimony of accomplices, and S. 114, III. (b) is merely a guide to assist the Court, though in a vast majority of cases prudence requires that there shall be corroboration. The evidence of one approver cannot be said to corroborate that of another except where both have, at the earliest opportunity, and before there has been any chance of corroboration, deposed to the same acts as having been committed by a particular accused person. A confession made by a co-accused after the whole of the prosecution evidence has been recorded can be used as evidence against the person making it, but cannot be used as against his co-accused either as evidence in itself or as corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice. *Narain Das v. ———S. 133, 114, III. (b)—Evidence of accomplice.

However convincing the evidence of an accomplice or approver may be of the facts necessary to be proved, it has become a settled course of practice not to convict an accused person on the uncorroborated evidence of an approver, and the corroboration ought to consist in some circumstances that affects the identity of the accused person. The corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice or approver should go to some circumstances, affecting the identity of the accused as participating in the transaction. And such corroboration ought to be that which is derived from unimpeachable or independent evidence, as distinguished from that derived from the earlier statements of the same accomplice or the statements of other accomplices. Emperor v. Baji Krishna.

———Ss. 133, 114, III. (b)—Evidence of accomplice.

There is no rule of law or practice that the self-incriminating portion of the evidence of an accomplice is unworthy of belief unless corroborated. The credibility of a witness who says that he and another joined in committing an offence stands per se as far as his self-accusation is concerned on the same footing as that of a witness who says that he alone committed an offence, though in the latter instance, there would be a narrowed basis for cross-examination to test his own self-accusation. *Emperor v. EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872) ———Ss. 133, 114, III. (b)—Evidence of accomplice—Value of Corroboration required, nature of.

The evidence of an accomplice must be corroborated in some material particulars, not only bearing upon the facts of the crime, but upon the accused's implication in it, and further, evidence of one accomplice is not available as corroboration of another. These rules laid down by English Courts are equally applicable in India. Nitai Chandra Jana v. Emperor. (S. B.)

———Ss. 133, 114, III. (b)—Evidence of approver—Corroboration of.

A previous statement of an approver is no corroboration of a later statement by the same approver. There must be a corroborative evidence of the approver when he speaks to the identity of the accused, because while he may speak truly as to the actual factum of the murder, he may speak falsely when he speaks as to the identity of the accused. So that there must be some evidence which associates or tends to associate each individual accused with the crime, or—there must be such evidence as to the identity of the accused, as satisfies the Court that when the approver speaks as to the complicity of this accused and that accused in the offence, he speaks the truth. *Khairo v. The proposition that an illiterate person is immune from the processes of law with regard to contradiction by a previous statement, has no authority in law, and would nullify almost completely the provisions of S. 145 if it were so, as the majority of witnesses in criminal cases are illiterate. It makes not the slight

The right procedure, when a prosecution witness is contradicting himself is to ask the Judge to look into the diary and decide whether the accused person should not have a copy of the statement. ———S. 145—Previous statements—Cross-examination.

There is no duty cast upon the Counsel who wishes to cross-examine a witness by putting to him a previous statement, first, to prove that statement. S. 145, Evidence Act, has to be read with S. 162, Cr. P. C., and quite clearly indicates that the attention of a witness is to be called to the previous statement before the writing can be proved. If the witness admits the previous statement, or explains any discrepancy or contradiction, it obviously makes it unnecessary for the statement thereafter to be proved. On the other hand, if the statement still requires to be proved, that can be done later by calling the person before whom the statement was made. Muzaffar Khan Sikandar Khan v. Emperor.

Where a Judge has not allowed Counsel affectively to cross-examine the witnesses called for the Crown when they had made previous statements which contradicted their statements in the Sessions Court, as (a) their previous statements had not at that stage been proved, and (b) the witnesses were illiterate, there has been a failure of justice in the hearing of the case. The mere fact that the Judge may have taken into consideration any discrepancies which might exist before he wrote his judgment does not cure the failure of justice. *Muzaffar Khan Sikandar Khan v. It is unsafe to convict a person upon the evidence of an accomplice, unless he is corroborated in material particulars, both as to the circumstances of the offence and the identity of the persons whom he implicates. When several persons are indicted and the evidence of the accomplice is confined as to some only and not as to others, the Court, as a general rule, ought to acquit those against whom there is no corroboration. The foremost essential condition about an approver's statement being good evidence is that the approver's statement must be a trustworthy statement. Lodya Mahar v. Emperor.

For this reason the law has enacted that a party desiring to cross-examine its own witness has to take the permission of the Court, implying thereby that there is a discretion in the Court whether it would permit the witness to be cross-examined or not. That discretion must always be exercised with caution by the Court before which the matter

—S. 133—Evidence of accomplice—Corroboration—Necessity of.

Under S. 133, Evidence Act, an accomplice is a competent witness against an accused and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. But by a series of judicial decisions, the rule as to the necessity of substantial corroboration of this sort of tainted evidence has become a rule of practice of such universal application that it has almost acquired the force of law. The evidence of an accomplice must be confirmed not only as to the material circumstances of the case but also as to the identity of each prisoner. Daulat v. Emperor.

—S. 133—Evidence of accomplice—Value of.

There is nothing improper in tendering an accomplice as a witness, apart from any question of pardon. Such a person is a competent witness, and there is no irregularity in not sending up for trial every person against whom any suspicion appears to exist. It may, on occasions, be desirable to include the evidence of an accomplice for what it is worth without tendering him a pardon. The question of the weight of such a person's evidence is, of course, important ; since the man who does not know what may happen to him will naturally have a strong motive for minimizing his own part in any criminal transaction ; his evidence must be treated with even greater caution than that of an established approver. *Nga Thein Pe v. —S. 133—Evidence of accomplice—Value of—Principles of.

While dealing with a question to be decided under S. 133 and S. 114, Illus. (b), the following propositions should be taken into consideration. First: Provided it has been established by extraneous evidence or matters appearing on the record that the accomplices are not acting in collusion with one another, the cumulative effect of the evidence of two or more of them may be sufficient to remove the prima facie presumption of the individual unworthiness of credit of their statements, and, if this be the case, a conviction may legitimately be recorded upon their statements alone, if the Court is convinced of their truth. Secondly : that evidence from a source which is not prima facie unworthy of credit may prove a fact which displaces in a particular case the presumption that an accomplice is unworthy of credit. Thirdly : that corroboration must proceed from a source extraneous to the person whose testimony it is sought to corroborate. The King v. Nga Myo. (F. B.)

Once the mischief of considering the grant of permission to be equivalent to an adjudication or expression of opinion of the Court adverse to the veracity of the witness is got rid of, it is harder to justify the refusal than the grant to any party of permission to cross-examine any witness who supports the case of his opponent. *Nebi Mandal v. contrary, in law the evidence of an accomplice stands on the same footing as any other evidence. The Court is not obliged to hold that he is unworthy of credit and must be corroborated. ———S. 133—Evidence of accomplice.

Evidence of an accomplice is tainted evidence and there is, therefore, need of corroboration in order to base a conviction upon such evidence. The evidence of an accomplice cannot be relied on for corroboration of the evidence of another accomplice. It is mainly the duty of the prosecution to bring the accomplice's character of the evidence to the notice of the Court and then invite it to believe it by reference to the corroborative evidence on record. In cases where a Judge combines the function of a Judge and Jury, he is bound under law to scrutinize the accomplice's evidence with the same degree of care and caution, which is required of him in a trial by Jury and just as he is bound to give a warning to the Jury, he must be warned himself that it is unsafe to convict a person on accomplice's evidence in the absence of substantial corroboration by independent evidence, and the Court of Appeal or Revision has to see whether the trying Magistrate or the Judge who heard the appeal weighed the evidence with or without full knowledge and recognition of its accomplice character and the necessity for corroboration. *Muhammad Usuf Khan v. corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particulars not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it. EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

———S. 154—Hostile witness—Prosecution witness making admission in favour of defence, whether hostile.

A witness is not necessarily hostile because in an absent-minded moment he lets out the truth. It must be shown before a witness can be declared hostile that there is good ground for believing that the statement he has made in favour of the defence is due to enmity to the prosecution. It may be an unfriendly act to let out the truth, but it is not necessarily a hostile act. Fouzdar Rai v. Emperor.

———S. 154—Hostile witness, reasons for declaring.

That a prosecution witness is a tenant of a relative of the accused is no reason at all for treating him as a hostile witness. That the statement of a prosecution witness before the Committing Magistrate differs from the statement recorded by the Police shortly after the occurrence, and that the cross-examination of the witness would help the Court to assess the exact value of the different parts of his testimony, is not a sufficient reason for allowing the cross-examination of the witness by the Public Prosecutor as a hostile witness. Emperor v. Satyendra Kumar Dutt Chowdhry.

The fact, that a witness is dealt with under S. 154 even when under that section he is cross-examined as to credit, in no way warrants a direction to the Jury that they are bound in law to place no reliance on his evidence or that the party who called and cross-examined him can take no advantage of any part of his evidence. The evidence of such a witness is not to be rejected either in whole or in part. It is not also to be rejected so far as it is in favour of the party calling the witness, nor is to be rejected so far as it is in favour of the opposite party. *Profulla Kumar Sarkar v. Emperor. (F. ———S. 154—Party, if bound by evidence of witness called by it—To declare witness hostile, written application, if necessary.

A party is not bound by the evidence of a witness whom he produces. No part of the statement of such a witness amounts to an admission on behalf of the party producing him. Nor there is any rule of law that a party is not able to say that a witness produced by him is not speaking the truth upon some particular point unless he makes a written application to say that the witness is hostile. *Babu Ram v. EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

The Court may, in its discretion, under S. 154, Evidence Act, permit the prosecution to cross-examine a witness, even though he had been originally called by them with regard to the matters elicited by the defence. In criminal prosecutions, the witnesses for the Crown are privileged from disclosing the channel through which they have received or communicated information. But the same privilege cannot be claimed by a detective, who cannot refuse on grounds of public policy to answer a question as to where he was secreted. Amrillool Hazra v. Emperor.

Where a party is allowed to treat his own witness as hostile and to cross-examine him, the effect of that cross-examination is to discredit the witness altogether, and the party cross-examining him cannot rely upon any portion of his evidence. Where the only witness for the prosecution is treated as hostile and cross-examined by the prosecution, the Judge must tell the Jury that there is no evidence on which they could find the accused guilty and direct the Jury to find a verdict of not guilty. Omission on the part of the Judge to do so is a serious misdirection of the Jury. Makbul Khan v. Emperor.

———S. 133—Offerer of bribe—Whether an accomplice.

A person who offers a bribe to a Public Officer or co-operates in the payment of a bribe or is instrumental in the negotiations for the purpose, or with the knowledge that the bribe has to be paid, advances money, is an abettor, and as such, an accomplice, and his evidence must be received with caution. *Muhammad Usuf Khan v. ———S. 133—Statement of accomplice—Corroboration.

Under S. 133, Evidence Act, the evidence of an accomplice by itself would be sufficient for the purpose of a conviction, but it is a rule of practice founded on experience that in every case where an accomplice has given evidence, the Court must raise a presumption that he is unworthy of credit unless corroborated in material particulars. Failure to raise that presumption is an error of law. Madan Guru v. Emperor. 24 Cr. L. J. 723 : 73 I. C. 963 : 4 P. L. T. 381.

———S. 133—Testimony of accomplice, what is.

A confession made by an accused person affecting himself and others with whom he is jointly tried may, under S. 30, Evidence Act, be taken into consideration as against the other accused. But a retracted confession is not the testimony of an accomplice within the meaning of S. 133, Evidence Act. Moyez Sardar v. Emperor. 26 Cr. L. J. 360 : 84 I. C. 712 : 40 C. L. J. 551 : A. I. ———S. 133—Uncorroborated evidence of accomplice—Conviction—Legality of.

It is, however, open to a Court to depart from that rule if it thinks that there are special circumstances in the case making it safe to do so, and in such cases, S. 133, Evidence Act, makes it clear that a conviction is not illegal merely because it is based upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice or of accomplices. In re : Surajpalsingh. 39 Cr. EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

———S. 133—Uncorroborated testimony of accomplice—Conviction, whether legal.

An accomplice is a competent witness against an accused and a conviction will not be illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, but this absolute rule of law, as regards the evidence of accomplices, is subject to a rule of guidance contained in Ill. (b) to S. 114 that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. Musa v. Emperor. 30 Cr. L. J. 333 : 114 I. C. 609 : I. R. 1929 Nag. 81 : A. I. ———S. 133—Uncorroborated testimony of accomplice—Conviction on—Duty of Court.

The uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is admissible in law. It is, however, the duty of the Judge to warn the Jury of the danger of convicting an accused person on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice or accomplices, and in the discretion of the Judge, to advise them not to convict upon such evidence; but the Judge should point out to the Jury that it is within their legal province to convict upon such unconfirmed evidence. Emperor v. Jamalidi Fakir. 25 Cr. L. J. 1000 : 81 I. C. 712 : 51 Cal. 160 : 28 C. W. N. 536 : A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 701.

———S. 133—Uncorroborated testimony of accomplice—Conviction on—Legality of.

A conviction based solely upon the evidence of the accomplices is not illegal. It is not a rule of law but one of mere practice and prudence that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars. The High Court will not, under its revisional jurisdiction, disturb a conviction merely on the ground that the said rule of practice has not been adhered to by the Court which has convicted, unless there are exceptional circumstances calling for the exercise of that jurisdiction in the interests of justice. Emperor v. Lallubhai. 10 Cr. L. J. 433 : 3 I. C. 963 : 11 Bom. L. R. 858.

———S. 133—Uncorroborated testimony of accomplice—Conviction—Legality of.

Although a conviction is not 'illegal' merely because it proceeds on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice, the rule of practice is now firmly established that corroboration of such testimony in material particulars connecting each of the individual accused with the crime is necessary to justify his conviction. *Hakam Singh v. EVIDENCE ACT (I OF 1872)

———S. 133—Uncorroborated testimony of accomplice—Conviction—Legality of.

Although it is not illegal to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, there is a consensus of opinion that a conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is rarely justifiable. The evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime; but the corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime. It is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. Hazari v. Emperor.

9 I. C. 978 : 9 M. L. T. 503.

———S. 133—Uncorroborated testimony of accomplice—Conviction on—Legality of.

The view that a Court cannot act on the evidence of an accomplice, unless it is corroborated, is not the law either of England or of India. As regards India, the substantive enactment is to be found in S. 133 of the Evidence Act. S. 114 deals with presumptions of fact and the illustration would seem to mean that a presumption of fact may be drawn, having regard to the facts of a particular case, that the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice in that case is untrue. The High Courts in this country have always professed, as a matter of practice rather than of law, to act upon the principles established in England. Just as in England the Judge has no power to withdraw a case from the Jury on the ground that there is no corroboration, so in India, where a Court is Judge of fact as well as of law, the Court as the Judge of fact is not precluded from considering the question whether the unsupported evidence of an accomplice is true or not. In a case where the Court is both Judge and Jury, it has to direct itself thus: consider the evidence of the approver, always bear in mind that it is tainted evidence, scrutinise it with the utmost care and accept it with the greatest caution. Then, if you believe it, act on it even if there is no corroboration in the strict sense of the word. If you do not believe it, reject it. Emperor v. Nilakanta.

———S. 133—Uncorroborated testimony of accomplice—Conviction on—Legality of.

Where a lower Court for any special reasons, convicts a person upon the sole testimony of accomplices after having its attention drawn to the rule that such testimony should not be believed without corroboration, the High Court will not interfere in revision except for very special reasons, but where the lower Court is of opinion that such evidence has been corroborated, the High Court may consider whether the corroboration is what is required by law, and if there is no corroboration, whether the conviction should be sustained on the evidence of accomplices alone. In a charge of bribery against a Judge, proof that money was borrowed by the man who is alleged to have paid the bribe shortly before the alleged payment, is no corroboration of the evidence of an accomplice as to payment. It only shows he had money to pay. There must be proof of some circumstance that affects the person charged with the offence. The general rule that an accomplice should be corroborated in material particulars is a mere rule of practice, the application of which is for the discretion of the Court by which the case is tried. It is a point which should never be lost sight of, in weighing the evidence of a man. But if the Court comes to the conclusion that the evidence of an accomplice is true, effect should be given to it. In re : Vyasa Rao.

XIV of the same Code. If a Magistrate finds that a witness is recorded as having made a statement different from that which he has made before him and he considers that in the circumstances of the case the discrepancy should be brought to light, he ought to ask the witness if he has made the statement attributed to him by the Police papers. If the witness admits that he has, he should be given an opportunity of explaining why the contradiction has occurred. The criminal proceedings taken by the accused were also unsuccessful. One day when two sons of the uncle and a third person were bringing sheaves of wheat from the disputed plot of land, one of the sons was shot dead. On behalf of the prosecution, the remaining son and the person accompanying him gave the story that the accused had shot the deceased. On behalf of the prosecution, two other independent witnesses who were in the neighbourhood of the place at the time, said that they heard two shots, went to the scene of murder, found the deceased lying dead and were told by the other son and the third person that the accused had murdered the deceased: Held, that the statements of the two independent witnesses were admissible under S. 157, Evidence Act, Identification proceedings held in the Jail amount merely to this that certain persons are brought to the Jail or other place and make statements, either express or implied, that certain individuals whom they point out are persons whom they recognise as having been concerned in a particular crime. These statements are not made on oath and are made in the course of extra-judicial proceedings. The law does not allow statements of this kind to be made available as evidence at the trial unless and until the persons who made those statements are called as witnesses. When those persons are called as witnesses, then these previous statements become admissible, not as substantive evidence in the case, but merely as evidence to corroborate or contradict the statements made by these witnesses in Court. *Nagina v. The object of Government in issuing Circulars is to bring to the notice of the Magistrates certain circumstances mentioned there in which, when relied upon, must be openly stated in Court and the parties allowed to comment thereon. In a case of forgery where the chief evidence against the accused consists of the comparison made by an expert of the forged document with documents proved to be in the accused's handwriting, the question whether the standard writings compared by the expert are properly proved is a matter of great importance. In cases where a conclusion is based regarding the authorship of a forged document, on a comparison of handwriting, the expert should generally be able to point to marked peculiarities in the ordinary writing of the accused, which are reproduced in the forged document, the accused being unable to avoid them. A conviction should not ordinarily be based on the mere evidence afforded by a comparison of handwriting by an expert without substantial corroboration. There may be cases in which the peculiarities in the handwriting of a person are so numerous and striking and there are so many mannerisms of the forger that he is unable to avoid in committing his forgery, that the Court may safely conclude on expert evidence alone that the writing is that of a particular person. For the purposes of S. 8, Explosives Act, IV of 1884, the word "occupier" means a person who was in actual occupation of the premises and control of the operations in progress there. The section imposes an obligation on the occupier to give notice of the accident forthwith. It must, therefore, refer to an individual who is actually on the spot and in charge of the factory. An occupier for the purposes of the Factories Act may include an owner if the owner is in actual possession of the factory. In any case when the owner appoints a manager and puts him in charge of the factory, both the owner and the manager cannot be regarded as being occupiers. The person who answers that description is the manager. Gopal Ambadas Chawre v. Emperor.

The practice in the Punjab of referring to statements in the First Information Reports, medico-legal reports and so forth as if they were evidence is not justified by law. The High Court has no power to order the transfer of an inquiry under the Extradition Act, S. 14, because the competency of a Magistrate to hold an inquiry under that section depends on the authorization of the Executive Government. There is no provision of law which empowers the High Court to request the Government to appoint another Magistrate to whom, if appointed, the High Court could transfer the inquiry. A Judge has no doubt the right to ask any question within limits at any time, but this right should be exercised with discretion. It is unfair to the accused to anticipate or break the thread of cross-examination. It is not the province of the Court to examine the witnesses, unless the pleaders on either side have omitted to put some material question or questions; and the Court should, as a general rule, leave the witnesses to the pleaders to be dealt with as laid down in S. 131 of the Act. *Nga Saw v. The meaning of S. 30 (1), Excise Act, is that a man may possess 12 quarts of foreign spirit without reference to any other kind of spirit, or liquor in his possession. The section permits a man to possess without pass or licence 12 reputed quart bottles of foreign spirit, 12 reputed quart bottles of foreign fermented liquor, one reputed quart bottle of country spirit and 4 reputed quart bottles of country fermented liquor, all at the same time. Cl. (a) of S. 30 (2) cannot mean that a man may keep foreign spirit for his private use without a pass or licence only if he has no foreign fermented liquor in his possession at the same time. The accused, a well-to-do Chinaman, who could afford to buy one to two hundred rupees worth of liquor for festive occasions was charged with possessing a large quantity of brandy and beer when the annual Chinese festival was in fact near at hand : Held, that the accused was prima facie entitled to the benefit of the exception contained in Cl. The words “private use” are not confined to the meaning of personal consumption. If an accused alleges that any foreign spirit or any foreign fermented liquor in his possession is for his private use and not for sale, it is for the prosecution to show that he has it for sale. In all cases where inquiries are held by Magistrates with a view to extraditing accused persons, it would be desirable that they should, if possible, be present thereat. S. 15, Extradition Act, ousts the jurisdiction of the High Court to inquire into the propriety of the warrant, but leaves open the question of the High Court's power to interfere with a Magistrate's action, if it was proved that such action was consequent upon a warrant issued by a Political Agent which was plainly illegal. Per Aston, J.—There is no provision in the Indian Extradition Act or in Cr. Where a warrant is issued by a Political Agent under S. 7, Extradition Act, its execution by a District Magistrate in accordance with the Act is an executive act and the High Court has no power to interfere in the exercise of its revisional powers. There is nothing in this view which in any way conflicts with the power of the High Court to interfere otherwise than by way of revision. Thus, the power of the Court to interfere under S. 491, Cr. Powers of the High Court under S. 307 (3) are not limited by the provisions of Sub-s. (2) of S. 423. In cases where there has been a ver- dict of not guilty, it is the practice of High Court not to reverse the verdict of a jury unless it is perverse or manifestly wrong. On the other hand, where the jury has returned a verdict of guilty, the matter stands on a different footing and it cannot be said that so long as the verdict is not perverse or palpably erroneous, the High Court must act against its own judgment and in the teeth, as it were, of its own appreciation of the evidence, must con- vict a person in respect to whose guilt it enter- tains grave doubts. It is the clear duty of the High Court in the interests of justice to reverse the verdict of a jury when it considers that the prosecution has failed to establish the charge and that the verdict of the jury is not sustain- able upon the evidence. *Emperor v. There is no derogation of the rights of the parties to a treaty by allowing one Government with the consent of the other to obtain extradition of a criminal who has committed an offence not mentioned in the treaty. A Government or a State is entitled, if it so wishes, to hand over persons subject to the law of another State at the request of that State. There is, in such a case, no derogation to the Sovereign rights of either party. All that S. 18, Extradition Act, provides is that the Act shall not work against the will of either party so as unduly to impose any liability on such party. The accused did not suggest that the Resident did not so satisfy himself in the present case. But if such a suggestion were to be made, it would not be properly the subject of inquiry by the Court, but should be stated to the Magistrate on an application to him to report to the Local Government under S. 8-A of the Extradition Act: Held, further that no form of warrant is prescribed in the Extradition Act or the rules, and the warrants clearly described the offences with which the accused were charged, which was all that was required by the ordinary form of warrant of arrest prescribed by S. 75 and Form II of Sch. EXTRADITION PROCEEDINGS

India has its own Extradition Act, namely Act XV of 1903, which has been drafted on the assumption that the Native States in India are not foreign within the meaning of the English Act of 1870. The Indian Act contains no reference to habeas corpus and only Ch. II has been incorporated in the English Act. Ch. III of the Indian Act relates to surrender of fugitive criminals in case of States other than Foreign States, and is intended to apply only to the surrender of fugitive criminals to Native States in India. As this chapter has not been made part of the English Act under S. 18 of the English Act, the English Act cannot be deemed to apply to a case falling under Ch. III. District Magistrate, Trivandrum v. K. C. Mammen Mappillai. (F. B.)

An essential condition of a reference under S. 307, is that the Judge must disagree with the verdict of the jurors, on all or any of the charges on which the accused have been tried and that the Judge should be clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court. *Emperor v. —S. 307—Reference—High Court, duty of—Reasons of Jury for their verdict, how ascertained.

In dealing with a reference under S. 307, the High Court has got to give due weight to the verdict of the Jury and also to the opinion of the Judge. If the Judge wishes to ascertain from the Jury their reasons for their verdict, he should put them specific questions with regard to the issues of fact arising in the case and also as to the evidence of particular witnesses. *Emperor v. S. 307, requires the High Court to give due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and of the Jury after considering the entire evidence and then to convict or acquit the accused. It does not require the High Court to reconstruct the verdict of the Jury. In giving due weight to the opinion of the Jury, the High Court should always hesitate to reverse a unanimous verdict unless it holds it to be unreasonable. Emperor v. Sagramai. 25 Cr. L. Where an accused person is found not guilty by the Jury on all the counts of a charge, and the Sessions Judge agrees with the verdict of the Jury in respect of some of the Counts and disagrees with the verdict in respect of others, he should, if he considers that the interests of justice require a reference to the High Court, refer the whole case, leaving it to the High Court to consider the whole of the evidence that was placed before the Jury, instead of referring the case only in regard to those Counts on which he disagrees with the verdict of the Jury, as by so doing he precludes the High Court from questioning or going behind that part of the verdict of the Jury with which he agrees and thus prevents it from considering the whole evidence that was placed before the Jury. *Emperor v. A composition arrived at between the parties of offence under S. 500, I. P. C., which is compoundable without the permission of the Court is complete as soon as it is made and has the effect of an acquittal in spite of the fact that one of the parties subsequently resiles from the compromise. If it is proved that the parties signed the document and understood its contents, it is incompetent for any party to it to withdraw from it. Since the compromise has immediate effect of acquittal so as to deprive the Magistrate of his jurisdiction to try the case, the subsequent withdrawal from it even before the filing of the compromise in the Court by any party can neither affect the acquittal nor revive the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to proceed with the case. The simple question for the Magistrate in such a case is to find whether or not the parties signed the document and understood its contents. Mst. Rambai v. Mst. Chandra Kumari Devi. 41 Cr. L. A Court of revision has power to sanction a compromise under S. 345, Cr. P. C. S. 439; Cr. P. C. sets forth the powers of a Court in revision. It only grants certain fixed powers and does not mention S. 345 (5).

—S. 345 (6)—Revision against acquittal—Acquittal of person under S. 315 (6) in respect of whom charge for wrongful confinement has been framed and who has not compounded case—High Court will interfere though Local Government has not appealed.

Ordinarily the High Court will interfere but rarely in revision with acquittals, whether put forward on behalf of Government or on behalf of private individuals, particularly so in cases where the correctness of the acquittal cannot be considered without a consideration of the evidence, but when a case comes to the notice of the High Court where the acquittal has depended not on an appreciation of the evidence, but has occurred in complete disregard of Cr. P. C., the High Court should interfere despite the fact that no appeal has been preferred by Government. The High Court will interfere with an acquittal not on merits but under S. 345 (6), Cr. P. C. of a person in respect of whom a charge for wrongful confinement has been framed and who has not compounded the case. Khilwan Singh v. Emperor. 38 Cr. L. J. 334 : 166 I. C. 926 : 9 R. A reference under S. 307 is not incompetent where the only witness for the prosecution upon which the Jury have based their verdict, is, in the opinion of the Sessions Judge, unreliable. Such a case is quite different from a case where the Sessions Judge merely takes a view of the evidence as a whole different from the view which the Jury are supposed to have taken in the matter. It is not in every case in which the verdict of the Jury is one which does not commend itself to the Sessions Judge that he is entitled to refer the case to the High Court. The principle applicable in cases under S. 307 is that where the verdict is a verdict which would not be come to by a reasonable man, then a reference under S. 307, is competent. *Emperor v. —Ss. 307, 342—Reference—Duty of High Court—Verdict manifestly wrong or perverse, finding as to.

Where in a case tried by a Jury, the Sessions Judge disagreeing with the unanimous verdict of the Jury makes a reference to the High Court under S. 307, the question to be decided by the High Court is whether the verdict of the Jury is manifestly wrong or perverse. The High Court has not to decide what would appeal to it as true or false, but has to consider whether the view taken by the Jury was such as could not be supported on any consideration of the case whatsoever. Emperor v. Mohammad Shafi.

—S. 307—Reference—Duty of Judge to state his own opinion referring to material evidence.

In a reference under S. 307, the Judge should set out in some detail his own opinion regarding the evidence and should state more particularly which part of the evidence, in his opinion, would entitle the Court in the interests of justice to convict the accused upon the charges, referred. A mere statement that the reasons for the reference are indicated in the charge to the Jury

—S. 307—Reference—When competent.

Where a Sessions Judge disagrees with the verdict of a Jury, S. 307 gives him a discretion to submit the case to the High Court; it is only when he is clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to the High Court, that he is bound to do so, if he is not clearly of that opinion, his failure to submit the case to the High Court is not a subject for interference by the High Court on appeal. *Eran Khan v. —S. 307—Reference—When to be made.

Though on the one hand reference should not be made in every case in which the Judge finds himself in disagreement with the Jury, on the other, the power of reference is not confined to those cases only in which the opinion of the Judge the verdict of the Jury is entirely perverse. No hard and fast rule can be laid down. The Judge must apply his mind and decide whether the ends of justice demand a reference. The decision whether a reference should or should not be made depends upon the extent of disagreement which the Judge alone can feel. The High Court in a case in which the Judge has not thought it fit to refer a case to High Court under S. 307 cannot direct him to do so. The Judge should leave the case in the hands of the executive authorities if he thinks that injustice had been done and he cannot interfere under the law. Rameshwar Singh v. Emperor.

It is ordinarily a matter entirely within the discretion of the Sessions Judge as to whether he should make a reference to the High Court under S. 307. This discretion, however, should always be exercised when the Judge thinks that the verdict is not supported by the evidence; it is the only way in which a miscarriage of justice by a perverse verdict of a Jury can be remedied by the High Court. It is not necessary that before making a reference, the Sessions Judge should be satisfied that the verdict is perverse, it is sufficient that he should be clearly of opinion that a reference is necessary for the ends of justice. If in a case in which for the ends of justice a reference is necessary, the Sessions Judge fails to make the reference and thus deprives the High Court of an opportunity to deal with the case on its merits, he does something more than merely acting in the erroneous exercise of his discretion. He fails to exercise his jurisdiction and this failure operates to the prejudice either of the Crown or of the accused, and it is well within the power of the High Court under S. 439 to direct the Sessions Judge in such a case to submit the case to the High Court for its consideration under S. 307. *Sarada Charan Mistri v. The Court on the hearing of a submitted case is free to acquit or convict without its being necessary to alter or reverse any verdict. It cannot, however, acquit or convict without considering the Jury's opinion. It has to give that opinion in its proper form unaltered and unreversed proper weight but it can leave an opinion which, if accepted, would amount to a verdict of acquittal completely untouched and still convict and vice versa. Where a Judge hears a case with a Jury and disagrees with them to such an extent that he feels that he cannot accept their verdict, he is entitled to refuse to accept that verdict and submit the case with his reasons to the High Court. The High Court then has thrown upon it the burden of examining for itself the entire evidence in the case deriving such assistance, as it can by giving due weight to, without being bound by, the opinion of the Sessions Judge and the Jury. The opinion of the Sessions Judge is that as expressed in the reference or at the hearing, and the opinion of the Jury is usually found expressed in the verdict. In such a case as the above, the High Court must make up its own mind, realising that it has a disadvantage in not having seen the witnesses, but has a freer hand than a Court of Appeal generally has. If it comes to the conclusion on the evidence that it should not convict if the case came before it in the capacity of a Trying Judge—and in arriving at that conclusion, it must give due weight to the fact that other persons have taken other views and have seen the witnesses—then its

At the end of a criminal trial, the Sessions Judge invited the opinion of the Assessors. Three of them expressed the view that the accused were not guilty; the fourth said: "All the three accused are guilty. I have personal knowledge about this matter. My knowledge was derived about three months ago while the case was under investigation": Held, that this expression of opinion did not necessitate a de novo trial with the aid of other Assessors. The proper course for the Judge was simply to ignore the opinion of the Assessor if he came to the conclusion that it was improperly expressed, or that he had been improperly influenced by extrajudicial considerations. There was nothing illegal in a Judge acting in that manner. Emperor v. Pahu.

The power of making references on the part of Judges engaged in criminal work in the districts is one, that should be used very sparingly. It is an artificial power which is the creature of statute only. It is most often utilised by Judges zealous indeed to perform their duties but usually somewhat inexperienced in the principles of criminal procedure. As long as it is the policy of the Government to rely on the verdicts of juries in the district, a policy which is supported by both the profession and the public and a policy which is cherished by the accused persons who are brought up for trial, so long must reliance be placed upon the decisions of juries and they must not be disturbed unless it can be shown beyond a peradventure that a perverse verdict has been arrived at, which can be demonstrated clearly from a perusal of the proceedings of the Court. *Emperor v. A Sessions Judge may refer a case to the High Court under S. 307, even if in his charge to the Jury, he drew their attention in particular to one peculiar circumstance in the evidence for the prosecution and told them that having regard to that circumstance, they should certainly pause and consider it carefully before returning their verdict, and it was, therefore, fairly open to the Jury, having regard to this weak link in the prosecution evidence, to acquit the accused. *Emperor v. S. 307—Reference—When competent—Judge's duty to ask Jury to give reasons.Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 307

A Sessions Judge is competent to make a reference to the High Court under S. 307 even when on the force of his charge to the Jury, it does not appear that the verdict was an unreasonable one; and in the reference, the High Court is not bound to act in accordance with the unanimous verdict of the Jury even if it is not shown to be perverse or manifestly wrong. In such a reference the High Court will form its own opinion on the evidence after giving due weight to the opinions of the Judge and Jury. A Sessions Judge after arriving at his conclusion to refer the case to the High Court under S. 307, and after telling the Jury that such was his intention, should invite the Jury to give the reasons of their verdict. But the circumstance that no such reasons have been recorded by the Judge does not warrant the High Court to decline to go with the evidence and arrive at its own judgment. *Emperor v. Under S. 307 a reference should be made only when the verdict of the Jury is manifestly wrong and not in every case of doubt nor in every case in which a different view from that of the Jury can be entertained. The absence of the complainant at the time when a case is taken up for hearing is sufficient to justify the Magistrate in dealing with the case under S. 247, and acquitting the accused.

The Magistrate is not bound to wait till the close of the day and see if the complainant appears, before taking action under the section.

A complainant cannot be represented by a Pleader in order to take away the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to proceed under S. 247 and the presence of the complainant's Vakil alone is not sufficient compliance with the requirements of S. 247. It is not sufficient for the complainant to appear at some time during the course of the day to which the hearing of the case is posted. He must be present at the time when the case is called on for hearing. The object of S. 247 is to prevent the complainant from being dilatory in the prosecution of the case, and if he does not care to be present when the case is called on, the accused is entitled to an acquittal unless the Magistrate chooses for reasons he thinks proper to adjourn the case.

Hence the petitioner does not want to proceed with the case and to get his witnesses examined, so the petition is filed and it is prayed that the case may be struck off without hearing." The Magistrate examined the complainant and found that there had been no compromise : Held, that it was the duty of the Magistrate to examine the complainant in order to satisfy himself that the petition was really one of compromise ; (2) that the petition was one of withdrawal under S. 248, and not one of compromise under S. 345 Cr. At the termination of the trial in which the pardon is given, the accomplice must be discharged by the Court. Then if so advised, the Crown may re-arrest and proceed against him for the offence in respect of which he was given a conditional pardon. When put upon his trial for that offence, he may plead to a competent Court his pardon, in bar. And that is a plea that the Court would be bound to hear and decide upon before going further and putting him on his defence. In deciding it the Court would have to raise the issues whether he had or had not complied with the conditions of the pardon and whether he had or had not made a full and a true disclosure of the whole facts, and where after having admittedly done that, he had at a later stage recanted, whether that recantation amounted to giving false evidence within the meaning of S. 339 and worked a forfeiture of the pardon. *Emperor v. When an approver is put on his trial, he may plead his pardon. The plea should be taken at the commencement of the proceedings before the Magistrate, for it strikes at the jurisdiction to take any proceedings at all against the approver and it would then be necessary for the Magistrate to consider whether the pardon had been forfeited. But if he decides against the approver, or even if the plea is not taken before the Magistrate, it can be pressed in the Sessions Court and that Court ought to try the question whether the pardon has been forfeited before trying the general issue. If, however, there is a possibility of the evidence on the two issues overlapping or being identical, the Judge may use his discretion and order the approver to be tried separately from the other accused. ————S. 337—Pardon—Tender of—Reasons for—Absence of—Effect of.

The fact that the Magistrate has not recorded his reasons as required by Sub-s. 1-A of S. 337 is merely an irregularity on the part of the Magistrate. The right of the accused or the approver cannot be affected because the Magistrate has failed to comply with a requirement imposed for the benefit of the accused. Nor it is material that the Magistrate in tendering the pardon did so after consulting the Local Government and with its authority. The essential fact is that the pardon is tendered to the approver by the Magistrate. Even if the Local Government did not intend to act under S. 337, in sanctioning grant of pardon to the approver but if their overt acts are such as to be only capable of being referred to that section, their intention not to act under it cannot matter. It is not necessary to consider whether the prosecution had a desire to reap the benefits of S. 337, while also desiring to evade the consequence of having to try the case before the High Court or Court of Session, because it is impossible thus to make the best of both words. *Faqir Singh v. S. 339 contemplates a pardon being forfeited under it, but neither in it nor in any other part of the Code is it enacted that the forfeiture of a pardon depends upon the opinion of the Judge or Magistrate trying a case in which the occasionally pardoned accomplice has agreed to make a full and true disclosure. It is therefore open to a pardoned accomplice, if placed on trial as an accomplice who has forfeited the pardon already accepted by him, to plead in bar of trial that he did comply with the condition on which the tender of pardon was made, and such plea in bar of trial would have to be gone into and decided before the accused is called on to enter his plea in defence to the charge of having committed the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered. The section does not enact that a person who has accepted a tender of pardon, renders himself liable to be tried for the offence in respect of which pardon was tendered, if he gave false evidence. What the section says is that he renders himself so liable (or forfeits the pardon) if by giving false evidence he has not complied with the —S. 337—Prosecution of approver—Procedure.

The accused, under a pardon given to him by the Committing Magistrate under S. 337, made "a full and true disclosure of the whole of the circumstances" within his knowledge relative to" the offence. He stuck to his story in his examination-in-chief before the Court of Sessions, but during his cross-examination he resiled from his statement. At the conclusion of the trial, which ended in the conviction of his accomplices, the accused was sent by the Sessions Judge in custody to the Committing Magistrate with an order directing that he should be committed for trial for the principal offence. The Magistrate accordingly withdrew the pardon and committed the accused to the Court of Sessions, where he was convicted on what was described as his plea of guilty: Held, (1) that the Sessions Judge had no authority under Cr. P. C. to order the accused to be committed for trial for the principal offence in respect of which a pardon

The word "inquiry" in S. 337, Cr. P. C., is meant to include everything done in a case by a Magistrate, whether the case has been challaned or not. When a case has been reported to a Magistrate by the Police, and he is asked to tender a pardon and does so, there is an "inquiry" within the meaning S. 337, Cr. P. All that the officer who can grant pardon under the provisions of S. 337 has to see is whether on the information at his disposal there is a prima facie case against the person to whom pardon is going to be tendered for an offence which is exclusively triable by a Court of Sessions. If that is so, he is competent to grant a pardon. It is no part of the duty of the Magistrate to take upon himself the task of making a thorough and searching inquiry in order to find out whether the offence which has been committed by the person is one which will be triable by the Court of Session or by a Magistrate. As soon as the Magistrate is informed that the offence is one which, according to the investigating authority, is exclusively triable by the Court of Session, then his duty is to record the statement after granting pardon to the person put before him. *Bhola Nath v. The words "the statement made by a person who has accepted the tender of pardon" in Sub-s. (2) of S. 339 are wide enough to cover a statement before the pardoning Magistrate. Ss. 339-A, 537—Applicability.

S. 339-A does not apply at all to the case of an approver who has stated that his statement as an approver was completely false. The section applies to a case in which the approver's case is still that he was one of the persons who had committed the offence but that the Public Prosecutor was in error in considering that he had in any way failed to comply with any of the conditions upon which the tender of pardon was made. *Gurdil Singh v. S. 339 (2)—Approver—Confession by—Admissibility.

Any statement made by an accused person before he receives pardon under S. 327 must, if it is of a confessional nature, be recorded strictly in accordance with the procedure prescribed for the record of confession by Ss. 164 and 364, or the statement of the accused after he has been pardoned may be recorded in his character of a witness under S. 164, or his statement may be one which is recorded formally as that of a witness examined in the course of an enquiry or trial. The word "statement" contemplated in Sub-s. 2 of S. 339, appears primarily to refer to a statement made by him as a witness as contemplated in Sub-s. 2 of S. 337 in the course of an enquiry or trial. It may also include a statement recorded under S. 164 after the tender of pardon but it can in no case include a confessional statement made by an accused person before the tender of pardon unless it was recorded in accordance with the strict procedure provided for recording confessions. Hence a statement made by the accused, of a confessional nature before he had been tendered pardon and after he was put on solemn affirmation, is inadmissible against him in his trial after he has forfeited the pardon if it is not recorded as a confession in the manner prescribed by Ss. 164 and 364. It is also otherwise inadmissible for the reason that the accused was induced to make that statement implicating himself and others on the promise of a pardon. Horilal v. Emperor.

When the Legislature used the words 'the District Magistrate' in S. 337 (1), it did not intend to exclude an Additional District Magistrate upon whom the ordinary powers of a District Magistrate had been conferred under Sub-s. (2) of S. 10. The Additional District Magistrate is

S. 337—Pardon—Contradictory statements in Sessions and Committing Court—Compliance with conditions of pardon.

In the interests of justice, the Legislature requires that where the case is committed to Sessions, the approver whatever statements he has made in the Court of the Committing Magistrate, should be examined as a witness in the Sessions trial. With the exception of evidence admitted under S. 288, it is upon evidence led in the Sessions Court that the guilt or innocence of the accused is determined, and it is in the Sessions Court that the approver has his main duty to perform. It cannot be said that an approver who denies all knowledge before the Committing Magistrate but who makes a full disclosure of facts in the Sessions Court is to be commended above one who makes a full disclosure in both Courts. But when the evidence given by the approver in the Sessions Court is in accordance with the conditions of his pardon, and is evidence upon which, in the circumstances, reliance might very well be placed, then the fact that in the Committing Magistrate's Court the approver gave false evidence should not necessarily be taken to be non-compliance with the conditions of pardon. Emperor v. Shahdino Dhaniparto. 41 Cr. L. J. 747 :

S. 337 (2)—Pardon—Forfeiture—Approver's refusal to make statement before Magistrate—Examination in Sessions Court before forfeiture.

Where an accused after accepting pardon denies all knowledge of facts before the Committing Magistrate and the case is committed to Sessions Court, the pardon cannot be forfeited before the accused is examined in Sessions Court. Once a pardon has been tendered and accepted, Cl. (2) of S. 337 renders it obligatory for the prosecution to examine the approver both in the Committing Magistrate's Court and in the Sessions Court, should the case be committed. The failure of the prosecution to examine the approver in the Sessions Court vitiates the trial. Emperor v. Shahdino Dhaniparto. 41 Cr. L. J. 747 :

If the trying Magistrate thinks that an approver has not made a full disclosure of the facts and that he should forfeit his pardon, he must discharge him at the termination of the trial; he has no power to direct his prosecution. He can only record his opinion that the approver has wilfully concealed something essential or given evidence which is positively false, and let the District Magistrate take action to prosecute the approver under S. 339, if he thinks fit. If so advised, the Crown may proceed against him for the offence in respect of which he was given a conditional pardon. When put on his trial for that offence he may plead to a competent Court his pardon in bar, and that is a plea that the Court is bound to hear and decide upon before going further and putting him on his defence. If he be committed to the Sessions, he can plead it again in the Sessions Court and the Judge will decide it before putting him on trial for the substantive offence. Emperor v. Nga Po Ket.

It is clearly not necessary that an approver should be punished for perjury if he can be punished sufficiently both for that and the original crime on a conviction for that original crime. Sanction, therefore, ought to be refused unless it appears that a conviction for the original crime is unlikely or a prosecution for it is undesirable for any other reason, or that on a conviction for the original crime the sentence that could be passed would be too light to cover both offences. Before sanction can be granted, therefore, it must be shown that there is no intention of prosecuting the approver for the original crime, or that he has already been prosecuted for it and either has been acquitted or has received or is likely to receive such a light sentence that it is not sufficient to cover his further crime of perjury. *Local Government v. The present Cr. P. C. contains no provision for the withdrawal of pardons. The question whether the pardon has been forfeited in each case a question of fact. The proper course in cases of alleged forfeiture is to draw up an order setting forth specifically the alleged breach of the condition of pardon, and to call upon the approver to show cause on a future date why he should not be tried for the offence for which he was pardoned. On the date fixed for the hearing, unless the approver admits the alleged breach of condition, the Magistrate or Judge should hear the evidence relied upon as establishing the breach and any rebutting evidence which the approver may offer, and should then record a definite finding as to whether there has been a breach or not. A definite finding arrived at in this manner is essential before the approver can be placed on his trial for the original offence. Aga To Galle v. Emperor.

A person against whom a complaint is preferred does not become an accused person for the purposes of S. 340, until the Magistrate acting under Chapter XVI, has decided to issue process against him. Sheikh Chand v. Mohamed Hanif. 8 Cr. L. J. 20 : 4 N. L. R. 81.

—S. 340—"Inquiry," when begins.

When a Magistrate directs under S. 202 inquiry by another Magistrate or Police Officer or other person, he is doing so in the course of his own enquiry into the offence and his own enquiry is, therefore, already begun under S. 346. It is not necessary that the Magistrate should begin to take evidence before the enquiry can be said to begin. In re : T. R. Balakrishna Reddiar. 28 Cr. L. J. 384 : 100 I. C. 992 : A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 591.

—S. 340—Legal advice—Accused, right of, to be defended by Pleader—Magistrate, power of, to permit a person to appear for accused—Discretion, exercise of.

Every Magistrate has a discretion to permit a person, including a Pleader not otherwise authorised to practise in his Court to appear for a person accused before the Court. This discretion, however, should be exercised judicially, and a permission should be given only in cases in which the Magistrate or the presiding officer considers that it is for the interest of the accused that it should be given. In re : W. Calogreedy. 18 Cr. L. J. 345 : 38 I. C. 729 : U. B. R. 1916 II, 121 : 10 Bur. L. T. 117 : A. I. R. 1918 U. Bur. 56.

—S. 340—Legal advice—Accused's right to legal assistance—Police, if can disallow access to legal advisers—Criminal Courts, power of, to order Police to permit access—Inherent power to prevent abuse of process.

In view of the provisions of S. 340, Cr. P. C., an accused should be at liberty to be defended by a Pleader not only at the time the proceedings are actually going on but should be allowed a reasonable opportunity, if in custody of getting into communication with his legal adviser for the purpose of preparing his defence. The Police cannot legitimately claim that an unconvicted prisoner who has been remanded to their custody should not be allowed to see his legal adviser until they choose to permit the same. In the exercise of its inherent power to prevent an abuse of its process, a Criminal Court can order the Police to permit an accused, who has been remanded to Police custody to have access to his legal advisers. Such a procedure is warranted by the provisions of S. 561-A, Cr. P. C. In re : Llewelyn Evans. 27 Cr. L. J. 1169 : 97 I. C. 801 : 28 Bom. L. R. 1043 : 50 Bom. 741 : A. I. R. 1926 Bom. 551.

—S. 340—Legal advice—Right of accused person to be represented by Pleader and to cross-examine prosecution witnesses.

The spirit of the law requires that if an accused person wishes to be represented by a Pleader he should be given an opportunity of being so represented and should also have an opportunity of cross-examining the witnesses for the prosecution. *Pita v. —S. 340—Legal advice.

Where at the commencement of a trial the accused desires to be given an opportunity to engage a Pleader and there has not already been a sufficiently long period given to him for this purpose, the Magistrate may proceed up to the end of recording his evidence of the prosecution witnesses and from that stage he should allow an adjournment in order to enable the accused to appoint a Pleader and that adjournment must be long enough to enable the Pleader to get proper instructions and to prepare himself for cross-examination. Pita v. Emperor. 26 Cr. L. J. 575 : 85 I. C. 719 : 47 All. 147 : A. I. R. 1925 All. 285.

—Ss. 340, 476—Legal advice—Accused person—Pleader—Right to be heard—Practice—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908); O. III, r. 1.

A Civil Court making a preliminary inquiry under S. 476, is not a Criminal Court and person against whom the inquiry is made is not an accused person. Therefore, a pleader has no right under S. 340 to appear for such a person. The general practice is to hear pleaders on behalf of persons in Civil or Criminal matters, and to secure their assistance as amicus curiae even where parties have no right to be heard either personally or by pleader. Ram Nihore Umar v. Emperor. 12 Cr. L. J. 231 : 10 I. C. 740 : 8 A. L. J. 237.

—S. 340—Scope—Whether proceedings under S. 167, fall under this section.

A Magistrate does not act in a purely executive capacity in proceedings under S. 167, and there is no good reason why the proceedings before a Magistrate under S. 167 should not be considered to fall within the provisions of S. 340. *Sunder Singh v. —S. 339—Joint trial—Accused resiling from pardon before giving evidence—Joint trial with other accused, legality of.

It is open to an accused, who has accepted pardon in the first instance, to renege from that pardon and to say that he does not want the pardon and that he is not willing to give evidence, but wishes to be tried so that his character may be cleared. An acceptance of pardon must continue in force till the person pardoned actually give evidence and then only any question can arise whether he has forfeited his pardon by not giving true evidence in the case. A pardon, which, though accepted for a time, is rejected by the accused himself before it really takes effect, cannot be treated as falling under S. 339, and therefore, there can be no objection to such an accused being jointly tried along with the other accused in the case. In re : Basireddi Naiappa.

assistance of his relations. In a case reported to the High Court under S. 341, Cr. P. C., the High Court has full discretion to do whatever the circumstances of the case require. The section gives the High Court power to pass sentence on the Magistrate's finding. Want of speech and hearing do not imply want of capacity either in the understanding or memory but only a difficulty in the means of communicating knowledge. There may be mental deficiency at the same time but it is not necessarily involved in the deaf-mute condition. The law of India does not provide for a sane deaf-mute who has never been instructed being exempted from punishment. A sane deaf-mute cannot generally live to a mature age without learning something of his duty towards his neighbour in person and property. A deaf-mute, to whom Ss. 82 and 83, Penal Code, do not apply, in order to escape criminal liability, comes within S. 84; in other words, if his mind is sound, his inability to hear and speak will not excuse him. *Emperor v. —S. 341—Reference to High Court—Power of High Court.

Accused were discharged by Magistrate under S. 209, Cr. P. C. Subsequently, the pardon tendered to the approver was withdrawn and he was committed for dacoity to the Court of Session. The material piece of evidence against the approver was his confessional statement incriminating both himself and the other accused. The Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court for quashing the commitment of the approver and for an order directing re-trial of the discharged accused along with the approver: Held, (1) that the High Court had power, under S. 437, Cr. P. C. to direct that further inquiry should be held in the case of the discharged accused and that if that inquiry ended in the framing of the charge, the said accused should be committed to the Court of Session : (2) that the provisions of S. 337 (3), Cr. P. C. were fully carried out when they were applicable, namely during the pendency of the Magisterial proceedings, and they did not constitute any bar against the High Court's ordering that, if the inquiry against the discharged persons ended in a commitment, they should be committed to be tried jointly with the approver: (3) that even if the commitment of the approver were not quashed, the High Court could order the joint trial of the discharged accused with the approver by directing that the trial of the approver should be delayed till the Magistrate passed his final orders in the case of the discharged accused. S. 327 (3) contemplates only a case where there has been a commitment made by the Magistrate to the Court of Session or the High Court. It omits to consider the case where the Magistrate himself, on his own responsibility, discharges the accused person. The meaning of the subsection is that the approver shall not be set at large until the judicial proceedings pending against the accused are finished. It is immaterial whether the proceedings are finished by a Magisterial order of discharge before a trial or by a Judge's order of acquittal after trial.

S. 342, Cr. P. C., is applicable to summons cases as well as to warrant cases, although it may be that in a summons case an examination of the accused may be dispensed with under the first clause of S. 245 of the Code, if the Magistrate after hearing the evidence finds that there is nothing to answer. An omission to comply with the provisions of S. 342, Cr. P. C., does not necessarily vitiate the trial. It depends on whether the accused has been prejudiced in the trial. Khachomal v. Emperor.

————S. 342—Applicability of—Summon cases—Procedure.

The provisions of S. 342, Cr. P. C., are inapplicable to summons cases, but there is no objection to a Magistrate questioning the accused generally for the purpose of enabling him to explain the circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, and in complicated cases, especially where the accused is not represented by Counsel, it is a desirable course, —S. 339-A—Prosecution of approver—Procedure.

Under the proviso to Sub-s. (1) of S. 339 the accused is entitled to plead, before he is tried for the offence in respect of which the pardon was tendered, that he has complied with the conditions of his pardon, in which case the onus lies on the prosecution to prove that such conditions have not been complied with. The trial for the offence in respect of which the pardon was granted, cannot begin until the requirements of S. 339-A were carried out in limine. Under S. 339-A, which was newly added, it is imperative on the Court of Sessions to ask the accused, before the charge is read out and explained to him under S. 271 (1), whether he pleads that he has complied with the conditions on which the tender of the pardon was made and to record his plea and proceed with the trial, and the assessors should before judgment is passed be called upon to express their opinion on the question whether or not the accused has complied with the conditions of his pardon. If the Court with the aid of the assessors finds that the accused has complied with the conditions of the pardon, it is incumbent on the Court to pass a judgment of acquittal. The failure to perform this duty vitiates the trial. Horilal v. Emperor. 40 Cr. L. J. 956 : 184 I. C. 351 : 12 R. N. 110 : 1939 N. L. J. 497.

Although an order holding that a pardon had been forfeited and directing the prosecution of the person who has forfeited the pardon had been made at a time when the old Cr. P. C. was in force, yet if the committal and the trial were held after the new Code had come into operation, the want of the Public Prosecutor's certificate under S. 339 (1) would vitiate the trial. *Lal Shah v. —S. 339-A—Scope.

In order to comply with the provisions of S. 339-A, the accused must be asked whether he pleads that he had complied with the conditions on which the tender of pardon was made to him. The terms of the section should be clearly explained to him and it should be made clear to him that he can plead the pardon as a bar to his trial. The provisions of the section are not complied with by merely asking the accused whether he has fulfilled the conditions on which the pardon was granted

S. 339 (2), Cr. P. C., makes a statement of an approver an exception to the rule of evidence in S. 24, Evidence Act, so far as that section excludes confession made as the result of inducement or promise, inasmuch as an approver is always induced to confess upon a promise of pardon. But should it appear that it was extorted as the result of undue pressure such as threats or violence, to that extent, the provisions of S. 24, Evidence Act, would be applicable. *Ram Nath v. The mere fact that the two statements are contradictory cannot in every case be a warrant for directing the prosecution of the approver. The discretion vested in the High Court must be exercised with extreme caution, and the cardinal question for consideration by the Court is whether the confession and the incriminating statement made by the approver were or were not true. If the circumstances point to the conclusion that the confession and the incriminating statement were not true, the irresistible inference must be that those statements were put in the mouth of the approver by some one and in such a case it would be opposed to public policy to prosecute and punish the approver for perjury. *Emperor v. When an accused person in answer to a general question or even one or two questions, gives replies which show that he is well aware of all the circumstances appearing in evidence against him and their implications, and attempts to explain them, the Judge may be going beyond his province if he questions him further in detail. He may be open to the criticism of cross-examining the accused, and attempting to elicit contradictory answers. This is more particularly the case when the accused is represented by his own Counsel. But it is the duty of the Court to be satisfied either by his statements or by his answers to questions or by both that the accused explains or has an opportunity to explain circumstances from which hostile inferences may be drawn against him. In re : Annamalai Mudali.

C. mean examined-in-chief, cross-examined and re-examined, and include also any cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses after the charge if the accused has re-called them for such examination under S. 256 of the Code. After this stage is reached, the law makes it obligatory for the Magistrate to question the accused generally on the case, for the purpose of enabling him to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, i. e., to examine him in the prescribed manner before he is called on his defence. The imperative provisions of law as regards the examination of the accused by the Court must be complied with, irrespective of the question as to whether the non-compliance has or has not prejudiced the accused on the merits. Non-compliance with this provision vitiates the proceedings made subsequent to, but not before, the stage, when the accused was entitled to have been questioned generally on the case, under the latter part of S. 342 (1) of the Code. *Mohammad Hayat Khan v. There was no further examination of the accused. It was contended in the High Court that there should have been a fresh examination of the accused after the prosecution witnesses were cross-examined after the addition and alteration of the new charges: Held, that on the addition and alteration of a charge the trial did not commence de novo and that if the Court was of opinion, that there would be no prejudice to the accused it was not necessary to examine the accused afresh under S. 342. *Shamlal Kalwar v. to explain is the most incriminating circumstance against him. The result of the examination may benefit the accused if a satisfactory explanation is offered by him; it may, however, be injurious to him if no explanation, or a false or unsatisfactory explanation, is given. The Court should, therefore, not only have the power to point out to the accused the circumstances appearing in the evidence which require explanation but it must exercise that power in such a way that the accused may know what points in the opinion of the Court require explanation, failure or refusal to give which will entitle the Court to draw an inference against the accused. In examining an accused person under S. 342, Cr. P. C., the Court should always frame questions dealing with such salient points in a case as in its opinion call for explanation. Every precaution should, however, be taken not to entrap the accused to make incriminating answers, and all questions in the nature of cross-examination should be avoided. *Emperor v. It is not necessary nor is it desirable to examine the accused in great detail or to force him to disclose his defence so as to enable the prosecution to take advantage of it when the witnesses for the accused are examined. It is not necessary, under S. 342, Cr. P. C., that the purport of evidence of each prosecution witness should be explained to the accused, if he is himself present at the trial and has heard what the witnesses have said. What is necessary is, that he should be given an opportunity before entering upon his defence to state generally what are the real facts in reference to the complaint. If he is defended or if he files a written statement, judicial questioning will generally add but little to the Court's knowledge, nor will a violation of any rule as to the stage at which he is to be examined make such difference. If he has not been prejudiced the error ought not to vitiate the trial. Mohiuddin v. Emperor.

it would be an entirely insufficient compliance with the provisions of the section to put merely a general question asking the accused what he had to say in explanation of the evidence against him. In an ordinary case dependent chiefly on oral evidence, an accused person would, from the very nature of things, have a very clear idea of what evidence was likely to be considered of importance against him by the Court. In such a case a failure to examine him properly might not be of very great importance. But where the case depends mainly on documentary evidence and it is impossible for the accused to know exactly what particular passages from the mass of documents produced, are considered by the prosecution or by the Court as requiring an explanation, proper examination of the accused is a matter of great importance. *Maung Ba Chit v. If new and material matter in support of the prosecution case is elicited in the cross-examination or re-examination of a prosecution witness, who has been examined after the examination of the accused, the accused should again be questioned on the case and asked generally to explain the circumstances. It is not entitled under this section to administer an inquisitorial interrogatory to the accused, or to subject him to cross-examination, or to ask any question of him with a view to elicit the truth of the matter, or by a series of supplementary questions to test the accuracy or reliability of the answers that he has been willing to give. When once the Court is satisfied that the accused appreciates the salient features of the evidence against him, its function under S. 342 is exhausted, and no further examination is permissible. If prosecution witnesses are re-called for an examination by the Court after their examination is over, their examination under S. 540, Cr. P. C., is no part of the prosecution case and a Magistrate is not bound to examine the accused under S. 342 of the Code once again after such examination. Mere illegality of the procedure adopted by a Magistrate is no ground for interference in revision and before any revisional action could be taken, it must at least be alleged that the accused has suffered a hardship through the illegality. A failure to make a final examination of an accused at the proper time under S. 342, Cr. P. The procedure does not apply to a witness not previously before the Court but subsequently called by the Court itself. And where such witness summoned by the Court, does not introduce any new fact, but only amplifies the statements of the previous witnesses, there can be no prejudice caused whatever to the accused by an omission to do something which the law does not direct, namely, the examination of the accused after the recording of this witness's evidence. *Sheo Ram v. The word "examined" in S. 342 includes the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses and cannot be taken as including only those answers which the witnesses give to questions put to them in the first instance by the prosecuting Counsel or Pleader. The stage in the trial prescribed by S. 342 when the accused has to be questioned generally on the case for the prosecution is after the prosecution evidence is complete and before he is called upon to enter upon his defence. The Code intends that the accused shall be given an opportunity of explaining any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, that must mean the whole of the evidence against him and any examination of the accused under S. 342 before that evidence is closed cannot possibly fulfil the conditions of the section. The obligation imposed by S. 256, Cr. P. The failure by a Magistrate to examine an accused person for the purpose of S. 342 is a grave irregularity and might, in a suitable case, be in itself a sufficient ground for setting aside a conviction. The fact that the accused was examined and cross-examined as a prosecution witness in a cross-case would not relieve the Magistrate of the duty imposed on him by the above section or lessen the gravity of the irregularity. Where, however, the irregularity is not such as to prevent the Magistrate from arriving at a correct view of the facts and the accused has said all he has had to say in the capacity of a prosecution witness, and no unfair use has been made of any admission made by him as a witness, the High Court will not order a re-trial. *Nageshar Prasad v. Where an accused kept silence when denounced by the dying person in the presence of the accused and others, if the silence of the accused is to be regarded as an important point for the prosecution, then at the Sessions trial it is necessary by reasons of S. 342, Cr. P. C., for trial Court to put to the accused as part of the case for the Crown the fact that he remained silent, and to invite his explanation as to why he did so. The provisions of this section make it clear that this examination takes place for enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. The omission to ask such a question is an irregularity. The question for the Court in every case in which an irregularity of this kind has been committed is whether in fact a failure of justice has been occasioned by reason of the irregularity which has occurred. *Emperor v. The provisions of S. 342, Cr. P. C. are mandatory and non-compliance with them vitiates the trial. The object of S. 342 is (1) to communicate to the accused, to the full extent that may be found necessary in each particular case, what is alleged against him in the evidence for the prosecution; (2) to ascertain from him what explanation or defence, in law or in fact, he wishes to put forward in respect thereof. Where the accused is ignorant person who cannot be expected to know or understand what particular parts of the evidence are, or are likely to be considered by the Court to be against him, it is necessary that his attention should be directed to all vital parts of the evidence against him. It is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of S. 342 to ask an accused the general question: "Have you anything more to say in this case?" or "you have heard the prosecution witnesses against you, what have you to say?" *Tani v. A complainant who, having a genuine grievance, wilfully exaggerates or distorts the same in order to aggravate the case against the accused, is liable, in the discretion of the trial Court, to be prosecuted for any offence against the Penal Code which he may have committed, but the policy of the Legislature seems to be to limit the summary jurisdiction of the Court under S. 250 to simple cases, in which the complainant is found to

S. 342, Cr. P. C., is applicable to summons cases also. The omission to comply with S. 342, Cr. P. A trial of a warrant case should be regarded as comprising not merely two stages, prosecution and defence, but three stages, prosecution, further cross-examination of prosecution witnesses and defence; it is clear, therefore, that S. 342 does not lay down any particular moment of time but a period of time within which the examination can be held. If the trial of a warrant case were regarded as having only two stages—prosecution and defence—then S. 342 would have to be interpreted as indicating a particular moment of time, namely that intervening between the close of the first stage and the beginning of the second. If, however, there are three stages, then the examination under S. 342 can be held either immediately after the close of the first stage or immediately before the beginning of the third stage or for the matter of that at any time between these two points. *Mohammad Nawaz v. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 342

———S. 342—Object of—Evidence against accused not direct but circumstantial—Non-compliance with S. 342—Re-trial.

The object of the questioning of the accused under S. 342, Cr. P. C., is that the circumstances which, if unexplained, would lead to conviction, should be pointed out to the accused by the Court, so that he may have an opportunity to give his explanation, if any, in regard to them. This procedure becomes all the more necessary in cases where the evidence against the accused is not direct but entirely circumstantial. On failure to comply with the provisions of S. 342, it is necessary to send the case back for re-trial. Chinnu v. Emperor.

———S. 342—Object of—Examination of accused—Mode.

The object of S. 342, Cr. P. C. is to enable the accused to know what, in opinion of Court, are circumstances which from the evidence appear to be against him. The section makes it obligatory for the Court to tell the accused as to what are the circumstances which he has to explain. The time and the stage of the trial at which the Court is required to put the question to the accused is also of importance; it is after the close of the prosecution case and before the accused is called on for his defence. At this stage it is necessary that the Court should make up its mind as to whether there are circumstances appearing from the prosecution evidence against the accused, and if it is of opinion that there are such circumstances the accused must be apprised of the circumstances so that he may explain them to the satisfaction of the Court. The mere question as to whether the accused has anything to say after hearing the cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the law. Durga Ram v. Emperor.

———S. 342—Written statement of accused.

S. 256, Cr. P. C., directs the Court to accept a written statement and it is intended that the Court should read it. If, therefore an accused person when examined under S. 342 of the Code states that he will file a written statement, that statement must be accepted in lieu of his oral statement. In every case the test is whether there has been prejudice to the accused by reason of the absence of judicial questioning and whether the defect is cured by S. 537 of the Code. If at the close of the prosecution case an accused person states that he is going to file a written statement and does so, he need not be asked anything further by the Magistrate. There may be cases in which, when fresh evidence is taken on remand, the accused ought to be given an opportunity of making a statement, that is, in effect of being examined by the Magistrate; but provided the accused has in fact had a reasonable and substantial opportunity of exercising the privilege accorded to him by the provisions of S. 342, Cr. P. C., that is, of either orally or in writing saying what he wishes to say in explanation of what has been alleged against him, a technical failure or omission in the procedure ought not to be regarded as rendering a trial wholly nugatory. *Mohiuddin v. the accused an opportunity of making a statement of his defence with his own lips; for instance, the question "What is your defence?" is a sufficient compliance with the mandatory provisions of S. 342, since it enables the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him. It is neither necessary nor desirable that there should be any detailed questioning of the accused under this section. The point at which the Court is bound to question the accused is after the witnesses for the prosecution have been cross-examined. A statement made by the accused under S. 342, Cr. P. C., is not made on oath and cannot be tested by cross-examination. The accused is offered an opportunity to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him on the principle that though the proof of the case against the prisoner must depend for its support, not upon the explanation on the part of the prisoner but upon the positive, affirmative evidence of his guilt given by the Crown, yet if he is involved by such evidence in a state of considerable suspicion, he is called upon, for his own sake and for his own safety, to state and elucidate the circumstances, whatever they may be, which might reconcile such suspicious appearances with perfect innocence. The statement of the accused cannot be placed on a higher level than this and the Court and the Jury are expressly left free to draw such inference from the refusal of the accused to answer or from the answers he gives as they think just. *Emperor v. A complaint under S. 417, Penal Code, alleged that the accused had borrowed a sum of money from the complainant on the security of a hand-note by falsely representing that the money was required for necessity of a khankah and for its sajjadanashin and that it was being borrowed on behalf of the latter. Process was issued against the accused but before any evidence was recorded, a petition of compromise was filed before the Magistrate. The Magistrate refused permission to compound the case on the ground that the offence related to a public trust. On revision : Held, that although the pretence of the accused was that the money was required for khankah or for sajjadanashin inasmuch as the hand-note which he executed made himself personally liable, the funds of the khankah were not in any way put in jeopardy and that having regard to the fact that the compromise was arrived at an early stage of the case before any evidence was recorded, the Magistrate should have given permission to compound the offence. *Nehal Ahmad Khan v. Accused asked for an adjournment in order to enable him to apply to the High Court for transfer. The Magistrate adjourned the case on condition that a sum of Rs. 20 was paid by way of costs: Held, that under S. 344, Cr. P. C., a Magistrate may adjourn a case on such terms as he thinks fit but this particular adjournment was one which was covered by the provisions of S. 526, Sub-s. (8), and the Court had to grant it. It is true that the explanation to Sub-s. (9) says that nothing contained in Sub-s. (8) or Sub-s. (9) restricts the powers of a Court under S. 344, but at the same time it is difficult to see how a Court can impose terms for granting an adjournment when it is bound to grant that adjournment whether the terms are accepted or not. *Salek Chand v. It is competent to a Magistrate in a pending trial or proceeding, to grant an adjournment conditionally under S. 344, Cr. P. C., on the payment of costs. The power can be exercised in a case tried on a report by the Police against the informant to the Police who, though a witness, virtually prosecutes the case. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to stay of proceedings in a Criminal Court pending the decision of a civil suit in regard to the same subject-matter. Each case must be determined upon its own facts. Even if some or all of the matters materially in issue are the same that, in itself cannot be a reason for staying the criminal proceedings. Where prosecution is public, the Court, as a rule, in the exercise of its inherent jurisdiction, would not stay criminal proceedings; where it is private, there would not be the same reluctance of the Court to interfere. If the object of the criminal proceedings be in reality to prejudice the trial of the civil suit or coerce the accused to a compromise, the Magistrate should, as a general rule, postpone the enquiry. In many cases the proper course would be to expedite civil proceedings where a question of fact involved therein is also raised in criminal proceedings. Gopal Chandra Chakraborti v. Emperor.

S., a Railway passenger, complained to the Police that he had been assaulted and abused by J., the Guard of the train in which he had travelled. Upon this J. was charged with the commission of offences under S. 323 and 504, Penal Code. At the trial, he produced a document alleged to have been written by S. which said : "Mr. J. has come to me and offered an unconditional apology. I beg to withdraw the case against him." S. admitted the agreement but said that it was 'given for office and not for Court' and that he wished the accused to be tried. The Magistrate held that the agreement was not a compromise but a withdrawal which could only be made by 'intimation to the Magistrate' and finding the accused guilty sentenced him to a fine. On a reference of the case to the High Court : Held, that the case had been compounded by S. and the conviction of J. was illegal. Emperor v. John.

———S. 345 (5-A)—Compromise in revision—No impropriety in order of lower Courts—Case heard and determined by competent Court—High Court, if can record compromise—Use of discretion—Aggrieved person must be before High Court.

It is clear from the language of S. 439, Cr. P. C., read with S. 345 (5-A) of the Code that the High Court can, in certain circumstances, allow a compromise to be recorded in the exercise of its revisional jurisdiction in the case of any proceeding, the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders or which otherwise comes to its knowledge. The High Court is competent to record the compromise having regard to the provisions of S. 345 (5-A) even although there is no impropriety in the order of either of the lower Courts in suitable circumstances; the parties can be allowed in such cases to compromise their disputes even after the cases in which they were concerned had been heard and determined by the Courts competent to try them. But the exceptional powers conferred by S. 345 (5-A) should not be used where the proceedings before the lower Court disclose no irregularity or impropriety, except where the record indicates that the parties made some attempt to compromise their differences while the matter was still before the trial Court and before the Court passed final orders. Ordinarily the party who seeks to invoke the jurisdiction of the High Court under Sub-s. (5-A) of S. 345, must be the person aggrieved by the offence which has been committed and not an accused person or a person who has been convicted in respect of that offence. In any event, it would not be competent for the High Court to allow a compromise to be recorded under Sub-s. (5-A) of S. 345, unless the aggrieved persons were actually before the High Court and had expressly recorded their consent to such a compromise being recorded. *Baburahi Sardar v. S. 345, Cr. P. C., deals only with the lawful compounding of offences. The principles which apply to the offence also apply to the exception. The section is not limited to acts done in Court or to cases in which the parties continue to be of the same mind until the case comes on for further hearing before the Court. Once a composition has been effected, the matter is at an end and the person injured cannot effectively rescind from the agreement. If he chooses to do so, it is for the Court to enquire into the accused's allegation that the offence was compounded out of Court and to direct an acquittal under the section if it so finds. A composition made before the filing of a complaint in Court is covered by the provisions of S. 345, the offence being complete when the acts constituting it have been committed, apart from whether any complaint or charge has been laid before the Court or not. The word 'accused' in Para. 6 of the section only describes the character of the person accused of the offence at the time of the trial when the question of the effect of the composition is under consideration. To operate as an acquittal, the compounding must have been completed and any incomplete agreement would not amount to an acquittal within the meaning of the law. *Kumarasami Chetty v. —S. 347—Commitment—Warrant case, trial of—Charge framed—Commitment to Sessions for portion of Charge—Procedure.

S. 347, Cr. P. C., authorises a Magistrate at any stage of the trial of a warrant case to commit the accused for trial to the Court of Session instead of completing the trial himself. The new charge which is then drawn up by the Magistrate has the effect of cancelling any previous charge framed by him but this is so only with respect to the subject-matter of the new charge. So far as this subject-matter is concerned, the previous proceedings before the Magistrate must be regarded as proceedings in an inquiry preliminary to commitment but this alternative of the character of the inquiry does not extend to any matter which is not the subject of the new charge. Where a Magistrate after having taken cognizance of a warrant case finds that the accused ought to be committed to the Court of Session in respect of a portion of the subject-matter of the charge, but that he has not committed a part of the offence with which he has been charged, his duty is to commit the accused for trial in respect of the subject-matter of the former portion of the charge and acquit him so far as the latter portion of the charge is concerned. S. 347 does not empower a Magistrate to discharge an accused. It is only in respect of the offence for which the accused is to be committed to the Court of Session that the proceedings are taken out of Ch. XXI of the Code and the other proceedings of the Magistrate continue to be governed by the provisions of that Chapter. Bishambhar Nath v. Emperor.

The question whether a case is not compoundable must be decided with reference to the state of facts existing at the date of the application to compound, and not with reference to the ultimate result of the case. While a case was being tried as one under S. 323, Penal Code, the complainant presented an application for compromise. No orders were passed on this application. After the medical evidence was recorded, the complainant withdrew the application for compromise. A charge was framed under S. 323 of the Penal Code and the accused was ultimately convicted under S. 352 of the Code : Held, that as the application for compromise was presented at a stage when the case was being tried as one under S. 323, and the permission of the Court was not granted on it, and the application was withdrawn by the time the case was found to be a compoundable one, the accused was not entitled to an acquittal on the basis of the compromise. *Rani v. C., which is compoundable without the permission of the Court is complete as soon as it is made and has the effect of an acquittal in spite of the fact that one of the parties subsequently resiles from the compromise. If it is proved that the parties signed the document and understood its contents, it is incompetent for any party to it to withdraw from it. Since the compromise has immediate effect of acquittal so as to deprive the Magistrate of his jurisdiction to try the case, the subsequent withdrawal from it even before the filing of the compromise in the Court by any party can neither affect the acquittal nor revive the jurisdiction of the Magistrate to proceed with the case. A District Magistrate or a Sub-Divisional Magistrate to whom a case has been submitted by a Magistrate of the second or third class under S. 349, Cr. P. When two persons are jointly tried before a Magistrate who being of opinion that he cannot pass a sentence sufficiently severe against one of them, forwards the case to a Superior Magistrate under S. 349, Cr. P. C., it is desirable that both the accused should be forwarded, though the Superior Magistrate would be competent to try only one of the accused who is actually sent up before him. *Emperor v. The evidence recorded by the Magistrate from whose file a case is transferred under this section, having been recorded by a Magistrate who was not qualified to record it, cannot be taken into consideration by the Magistrate who actually tries the case. The failure to hold the trial de novo in such a case is an illegality which vitiates the trial and not merely an irregularity covered by S. 537, Cr. P. C. Ambica Singh v. Emperor. 19 Cr. L. It is a general principle of the Cr. P. C. that evidence taken by one Magistrate is not evidence in a trial before another Magistrate unless some provisions of law expressly makes it so. The mere consent of the parties is not sufficient for the purpose. Where a Second Class Magistrate, who was not competent to try a case submitted it to a superior Magistrate under S. 346 and the latter Magistrate made an order of discharge merely after hearing argument on the evidence already taken by the inferior Magistrate : Held, that it could not be said that the superior Magistrate had tried the case himself within the meaning of S. 346 (2) and the order passed by him was, therefore, illegal. *Paravada China v. Unless and until the accused has definitely claimed to be tried as an European British subject and his claim has been allowed, the local High Court, not being a High Court within the meaning of S. 4 (j) with reference to proceedings against European British subjects, can exercise its revisional powers. *Emperor v. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 350

When a case is transferred from the Court of one Magistrate to that of another, the accused has a right to demand that the witnesses or any of them shall be re-summoned and re-heard, and he has such a right not only in warrant cases but also in the case of summary trials, and trials of summons cases and when an accused person makes such a demand, his demand must be complied with, as it is not competent to the second Magistrate to treat the evidence recorded by the first Magistrate as evidence in the case. The time when an accused person must exercise the right is, when the second Magistrate commences his proceedings. When a witness is re-summoned under the proviso to S. 350 and he retracts his former statement, it is not admissible to treat the former statement as evidence in the case. Sahib Din v. Emperor.

The words “re-summoned and re-heard” used in proviso (a), S. 350, Cr. P. C., presuppose that the witnesses have already been summoned and heard. S. 350 is inserted in order that an accused should not be prejudiced by a Magistrate relying on evidence which he did not himself record. Where, therefore, in a prosecution under Ss. 193, 467 and 471, Penal Code, after the Government Examiner of Questioned Documents was examined on Commission on the transfer of the Magistrate a de novo trial is commenced and the second Magistrate records against the evidence of all witnesses but no commission is issued a second time to examine the Expert, S. 350 does not apply inasmuch as in case of witnesses examined by interrogatories, there would be no point whatever in the second Magistrate issuing a further commission for interrogatory in the trial. *Kaura Ram v. In other words, the section covers cases of transfer as well as those cases in which the Court remains the same but the person of the presiding officer is changed. It is open to an accused to waive his right under the section. But even if there is non-compliance with the provisions of the section, the irregularity is curable unless prejudice is shown. Ram Das v. Emperor.

The phrase "under the provisions hereinbefore contained" in S. 347 must relate to those provisions in Chap. XVIII of the Code which define the procedure to be adopted in inquiries into cases triable by the Court of Sessions. When a case has not reached the stage of committal and nothing in the main proceedings has to be undone before the procedure which is prescribed by law can be followed, no question of the prejudice to the accused arises. Where in proceedings for offences under Ss. 406 and 420 before a Presidency Magistrate, the Magistrate heard the prosecution evidence and was then transferred and his successor took up the case and formed the conclusion that it was one which should be tried by a Court of Session inasmuch as it involved the offences also of forgery and using as genuine a forged document, rendered punishable by S. 467 and S. 471, Penal Code, respectively, and applications were then made by the petitioner for a de novo trial: Held, that apart from any difference in procedure in the method of recording evidence prescribed by S. 362 (1) and Sub-s. —S. 350—“De novo trial”, meaning and object of.

A de novo trial means a new trial from the very beginning of the case. The object of granting a de novo trial is to enable the Magistrate who hears the case to see the way in which the witnesses give evidence before him, to mark their demeanour, and thereby to be in a position to judge of their credibility. The object is lost if the witnesses are only allowed to be cross-examined by the accused. Such a course is not in accordance with the provisions of S. 350, Cr. P. C. Even if no objection is taken to the course of merely allowing the witnesses to be cross-examined further, still the trial is vitiated. Narayan Reddy v. Enumula Bojamma.

S. 350, Cr. P. C., does not in terms exclude summary trials from its operation. It applies to all enquiries or trials conducted by a Magistrate in which the whole or any part of the evidence has been heard and recorded. It depends on the way in which the evidence has been recorded in each case whether S. 350 would apply or not. In trying a case summarily it is enough if scanty notes of the evidence are made, and these need not be kept on the record at all. Where such notes are allowed to remain it would obviously be improper for the Magistrate to rely on such inadequate material. But where the prosecution evidence was recorded by the first Magistrate in extenso in narrative form, at least quite as fully as it would have been in a summons case where by S. 355, Cr. P. C., a memorandum of the substance is enough, it cannot be urged that S. 350 would not apply to such evidence if recorded in a summons case. Emperor v. Durga Prasad.

Except where the law expressly permits waiver the right of an accused should not be held to be lost by his consent to a procedure or to admission of evidence which the law does not authorise. The prisoner on his trial can consent to nothing. It is the duty of Magistrates and all Criminal Courts to follow the procedure prescribed by law, and the consent of the accused cannot be invoked against irregularity in procedure. Where after several witnesses were examined the case was transferred to another Magistrate, the latter acted irregularly in convicting the accused on evidence partly recorded by the former Magistrate. S. 350, Cr. P. C. not being applicable to such a case, the irregularity could not be waived by the accused. Deputy Legal Remembrancer v. Upendra Kumar.

The applicant was challaned and convicted on three charges under S. 420, I. P. C., which were tried together under S. 234, Cr. P. C., on the allegation that in his capacity as a Revenue Inspector he cheated three persons by dishonestly inducing them to deliver to him sums of money collected by them from several others, they themselves contributing to the sum their own quota of subscriptions. The applicant under orders from the Tahsildar caused a list of the tenants of a certain village to be prepared, showing the amount each of the tenants would have to pay towards the War Loan. Sometime after he offered to some of them within the hearing of others to cut down the subscriptions to half if he was paid Rs. 2 a piece and to omit altogether the names of persons who were to pay Rs. 7-12-0 if they paid him Re. 1 each. The villagers were then told to bring the money and they met in two groups. Seven out of one group paid Rs. 2 each to K., who thus collected Rs. 16 including Rs. 2 of his own and paid the amount to the applicant, who made the necessary corrections in the list already prepared. Similarly C. collected Rs. 9 from 6 persons including himself out of the other group and paid it to the applicant, who made corrections in the list as promised. The case was originally tried by the District Magistrate but on an application for transfer to Judicial Commissioner it was sent to the file of a First Class Magistrate in the same District. In the course of his arguments in the proceeding under the transfer application, the applicant's Counsel expressed his intention not to apply for a re-hearing of the case. The Magistrate, to whose file the case was transferred, held that this constituted a waiver on the part of the accused and consequently refused to grant the prayer of the applicant for a trial de novo. On appeal the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction and sentence on one only and upheld those on the other two. The applicant urged amongst others the following grounds : (1) that there were an illegal contravention of S. 350 in refusing to grant a trial de novo; (2) that there was a non-compliance with Ss. 223 and 224, Cr. P. C., causing in fact a failure of justice and illegal misuse of S. 336 inasmuch as the charges did not give necessary notice of the matter charged, (3) that the charges framed were in contravention of the provisions of Ss. 233 and 234, Cr. P. C., as there were 15 persons cheated and 15 separate offences committed and the offences were wrongly combined in one trial : Held, that the statement of the applicant's Counsel not to apply for a fresh trial did not operate as an estoppel and the trial Court was wrong in refusing th

Cr. P. C., where the accused demands that the prosecution witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard, it is not necessary for the Magistrate to frame a new charge at the request of the accused. If, however, he does frame a new charge, the accused cannot have any cause for grievance. Under S. 227 (1), Cr. P. C., a Court can alter or add to any charge at any time before judgment is pronounced. Where, therefore, in a case a charge is framed against an accused under S. 454, Penal Code, but the case is subsequently transferred to another Magistrate who frames a fresh charge under Ss. 411 and 454 and the case is again transferred to a third Magistrate who re-commences the trial and again frames charges under Ss. 411 and 454, Penal Code, there is absolutely no irregularity in framing charges afresh as the first Magistrate could have added a charge under S. 411 at any time, nor is the accused in any manner prejudiced, the more so when the accused himself applies for a de novo trial before the subsequent Magistrate. Gajju v. Emperor.

Where in the course of a trial, the Trying Magistrate is succeeded by another and at a de novo trial held by the latter the depositions of witnesses in the previous trial are exhibited, “in order to save cross-examination” without the witnesses being examined afresh, it amounts to an irregularity that vitiates the trial. ———S. 350 (1)—De novo trial, requirements of—Second Magistrate must be different from first who has heard and recorded evidence and has ceased to have jurisdiction on.

There are two Magistrates contrasted by Sub-s. (1) of S. 350, Cr. P. C. The first Magistrate has two qualifications ; (1) he must have heard and recorded the whole or any part of the evidence, and (2) he must have ceased to exercise jurisdiction. The second Magistrate is contrasted with the first as "another Magistrate." The word "another" means that the second Magistrate should differ from the first both on point (1) and point (2). Where a Magistrate is transferred from a District after he has examined prosecution witnesses in a case and has recorded the statement of the accused and the case is transferred to other Magistrate but subsequently the first Magistrate is again re-posted to that District and the case is again transferred to his file, he differs only on point (2) and cannot be considered "another Magistrate" within the meaning of S. 350 (1) because he does not fulfil the two points of difference from the first Magistrate. Therefore, he does not come under S. 350 at all. Moreover, as he has heard all the evidence for the prosecution, there is no power in S. 350 for him to re-hear it even if he desired to do so. Such Magistrate is not, therefore, bound to hear the case de novo. Shyama Pado Deb v. Sunder Das. 39 Cr. L. J. 978 ; 177 I. C. 978 : 1938 A. L. J. 767 ; I. L. R. 1938 All. 794 ; 11 R. In such a case the accused is not entitled to a re-hearing of the evidence. The transfer from one Magistrate to another of a ‘register’ case or preliminary enquiry into the accusation of an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session is not provided for by proviso (a) to S. 350, Cr. —S. 350—Transfer of case—De novo trial—Right of accused.

It is clearly desirable for the proper administration of justice that normally the Magistrate who passes the final order should be the Magistrate who has heard all the evidence, and in order that there should be no prejudice to the accused it is expressly provided that, in cases where the Magistrate does not propose to follow this procedure, the accused is entitled to demand that this procedure shall be followed. Where a case is transferred to another Magistrate on the ground of the apprehension of accused that he would not get a fair trial, the accused cannot insist that there shall not be a de novo trial or inquiry, that the Magistrate was acting without jurisdiction in beginning the proceedings anew when the accused did not so desire. S. 350 lays down that one Magistrate succeeding another may either act on the evidence heard partly by his predecessor or he may re-summon the witnesses and re-commence the inquiry or trial. The discretion is in the Magistrate and his action is only limited in the trial by proviso (a). There is no proviso that the accused may demand that witnesses examined by the Magistrate who has ceased to exercise jurisdiction shall not be re-summoned and re-heard. Sardarilal v. Emperor.

Each transfer of a case gives an accused a fresh opportunity of exercising his right under the proviso to S. 350, Cr. P. C. The word ‘predecessor’ should be taken to mean ‘predecessors’ where there is more than one. It could not mean that a third Magistrate could act only on the evidence recorded by his predecessor, the second Magistrate and not also on the evidence recorded by the first Magistrate who handled the case. The accused can also change his mind in this matter. Moti v. Keshrichand.

When accused person objects to the presence of a Police Officer or other person the Magistrate has to decide whether the accused's fear of prejudice to his case is reasonable, considering the intelligence and susceptibilities of the class to which he belongs and not merely whether his presence is convenient or helpful to the Court or the prosecution. In the case of a person interested in the prosecution such as a Police Officer, other than the Prosecuting Officer, even where the Court itself does not see sufficient reason to order that he shall not remain in the Court room, it may put it to that or to the Prosecuting Officer whether in view of the accused's objection he will withdraw or be advised to withdraw from the Court-room. *Nathusingh v. —S. 352—Place of trial—Power of Magistrate.

Whether the Magistrate should hold the trial at a place other than his Court-house is a matter purely within the discretion of the Magistrate himself. Where he decides to hold the trial in the jail premises, he must pass a formal order directing that the trial should be held in the jail premises. Such a formal order must invariably be passed, as otherwise, if accused persons consider that they have a grievance in any matter, it would be difficult for them, in the absence of any formal order, to have recourse to higher authority for redress. It is ordinarily for the trying Magistrate to take the initiative in these matters if he considers that the trial should not be held in his Court-house. If however, this District Magistrate, who is responsible for law and order in his district, wishes to take the initiative in such matters himself, his proper course is not to move the Local Govt. himself straightway in the matter, but to instruct the Public Prosecutor to make an application to the Magistrate asking that the trial shall be held elsewhere. It is then for the Magistrate to pass formal orders as to whether he considers it desirable to hold a trial in the Court or outside of it. If the Magistrate then wishes to try the case in a place other than his Court, he will do so after obtaining the permission of the necessary authorities who are in control of the premises in which the Magistrate desires to hold the trial. *The King v. What the Sessions Judge can do is to direct the District Magistrate by himself, or by any of the Magistrate subordinate to him, to make the further inquiry, thus leaving the District Magistrates to exercise a discretion as to the selection of any Magistrate subordinate to him. A Sessions Judge in revision ordered further inquiry and directed that such inquiry should be made by the same Magistrate who originally heard the case on the evidence already adduced. The case had to be transferred by the District Magistrate to another Magistrate and the latter decided to proceed with the examination of the witnesses afresh. The Sessions Judge set aside that order: Held, (i) that the first order of the Sessions Judge was not in consonance with S. 436, Cr. P. C.; (ii) that by virtue of S. 350 (1), Cr. P. An accused has, under S. 350, Cr. P. C., a right to demand that the witnesses or any of them be summoned and re-examined when the case is tried by the Magistrate to whom it is transferred for trial. He can, however, waive his right. Chhann Prasad Singh v. Emperor.

—S. 350—Right of accused under—Nature of—Option of Magistrate.

Under S. 350 (1), Cr. P. C., the right of the accused is not to demand a re-trial as such, but simply that any or all of the witnesses should be re-summoned and re-heard. Subject to giving effect to that right, the option lies with the Magistrate to start the inquiry or trial all over again, or not. In some cases to which S. 350, Cr. P. C. applies, the previous charge is blotted out and in some cases not. It depends on which option the Magistrate adopts. The accused can in no case insist on a clean slate; and the Magistrate cannot ignore although he may amend the previous charge, if he decides to make use of any of the evidence previously recorded; but if he decides to wipe out all that previous evidence, the former charge is also wiped out. Tukaram v. Emperor.

—S. 350—Right of accused—Nature of—Discretion to act upon evidence already recorded, whether absolute—Exercise of option under S. 350 (1), whether can be made more than once.

The discretion given to a Magistrate, by S. 350 (1), Cr. P. C., to act or not to act upon the evidence recorded by his predecessor is not absolute but controlled by the first proviso to the section and it is solely left to the accused whether to claim a right to have the witnesses already examined by the previous Magistrate re-called and re-examined by the Second Magistrate. This right can be exercised by the accused only at the time —Ss. 350, 537—Scope—Magistrate recording evidence succeeded by another Magistrate—Succeeding Magistrate delivering judgment written by his predecessor without adopting it as his own—Defect, if curable under S. 537.

It is quite possible under S. 350, Cr. P. C., that the succeeding Magistrate may take the judgment left by his predecessor and compare it with the evidence recorded in the case and discover that it expresses what he himself would have decided on the case. In that case if there is no demand for a new trial on the part of the accused, he may deliver that judgment as his own. In fact by so doing, it becomes his own judgment. But if the succeeding Magistrate has delivered judgment not as his own but as that of his predecessor without signing it himself or dating it, the defect in the delivery of such judgment goes beyond a mere irregularity curable under S. 537. It is not contemplated in the Code that a Magistrate shall deliver any judgment other than his own, and if he does so, it is not an irregularity in the form of delivery; it is not delivering judgment at all. Chinnayar v. Maung Mya Thi.

—Ss. 350, 537—Scope—Right of accused—No demand or refusal—Omission of Magistrate to ask accused whether he would exercise right—No material irregularity or failure of justice.

S. 350, Cr. P. C., confers on an accused person the right to demand a re-hearing of evidence, and does not actually prescribe that the Magistrate shall ask the accused. Where there is no demand or refusal but merely an omission to exercise the right reserved by proviso (a) to S. 350, the accused is not necessarily materially prejudiced, nor is a failure of justice occasioned by the omission, the error being one which, is curable under S. 537, Cr. P. C. The mere fact that an accused stated before a Magistrate at the time of the framing of the charge that he did not wish the witness to be re-called, should not deter the Magistrate's successor from acting under S. 350. *Nga Po Tein v. S. 360 has been enacted not only for the protection of the witness but also to safeguard the interest of the accused. —Ss. 360, 537, 535—Object—Depositions of witness read over and not objected to by accused—Whether can be used in evidence against witness.

The object of reading over the depositions to the accused is to obtain an accurate record from the witness what he really means to say and to give him an opportunity of correcting the words which the Magistrate or his clerk has taken down. It is not to enable the accused or his Advocate to suggest corrections. All that the accused is entitled to be sure about is that the deposition had been read over and the witness has had an opportunity of correcting the original words, but the accused himself is not entitled to the opportunity of suggesting corrections. The primary object is to fix the witness and to enable him to protect himself against any inaccuracy in the words, taken down from his lips. S. 360 is intended to protect the accused as well as the witnesses. Where the accused in the case in which the witness is examined takes no objection of his deposition as recorded by the Court, it must be inferred that he is in no way prejudiced by the irregularity, if any, and the non-compliance in this respect cannot vitiate a trial in view of the provisions of Ss. 535 and 537. Where the witness himself admits to the Court that his deposition had been read out to him and that it had been clearly recorded, no prejudice in any case is caused to him. Sheoshankar Dhondbaji Mahar v. Emperor.

—S. 360—Procedure.

S. 350 lays down that the deposition is to be read over to the witness. This provision is not complied with in terms by giving the witness an opportunity of reading the deposition over to himself and except in cases where reading over to the witness would be absurd; as for example, with a stone-deaf person, the —S. 360—Scope of—Reading over deposition—Certificate, appending of.

There is nothing in S. 360 to indicate that a Magistrate must record that a deposition was read over in the presence of the accused, though it will be much better that he should do so in order that there might be no complaint as to his not having complied with the provisions of the section. S. 360 requires that the deposition of a witness should be read over in the presence of the accused so that an opportunity be given to him to challenge the correctness of the record. The mere reading of the deposition by the witness himself is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the section. Rameshar Singh v. Emperor.

2 I. C. 697 : 9 C. L. J. 690.

—S. 360—Record of evidence—Objection by accused.

S. 360 does not lay down that the deposition of a witness should be read over to him within the hearing of the accused. If the accused or his Pleader is doubtful as to the manner in which the statement of a witness has been recorded or as to any point in the deposition, he would have a right to ask that the deposition should be read over to him so that he can satisfy himself as to what has been actually recorded, but that demand should be made at once. *Arjun Kurmi v. The evidence of each witness should be read over to him after it is completed

-----S. 360—Commitment proceedings—Deposition read over to witness during examination of other witnesses, effect of.

Reading over to a witness his deposition while other witnesses are being examined is not sufficient compliance with the provisions of S. 360 since the object of that section is that the accused may have the opportunity of ascertaining that the evidence has been correctly recorded. This is of great importance in an inquiry with a view to commitment since under certain circumstances the evidence then taken may be used as evidence against the accused at the trial. *Manik v. -----S. 360—Complainant, examination of, record of, whether must be read over—Perjury—Alternate charge—Proof.

It is desirable that the substance of the oral examination of a complainant recorded under S. 200, Cr. P. C. should be read over to the deponent before it is required to be signed by him if it is to be ultimately used for contradicting him. The principle underlying S. 360, Cl. (i) should be made applicable on grounds of public policy to the substance of the examination of a complainant on oath, if the accuracy of records of such examination is to be vouchsafed. Where, however, this has not been done, the substance of the oral examination does not become inadmissible under S. 91, Evidence Act, in proof of the statement therein contained. Bhagirathi Bai v. Emperor. 26 Cr. L. J. 1401 :

89 I. C. 713 : A. I. R. 1926 Nag. 141.

-----S. 360—Construction—"Appear by Pleader," meaning of.

The words "Appear by Pleader", as used in S. 360 are nowhere defined. In ordinary acceptance these words mean "represented by Pleader" that is to say, having a Pleader to act and plead. Hari Narayan Chandra v. Emperor. 29 Cr. L. J. 49 :

106 I. C. 545 : 46 C. L. J. 368 : A. I. R. 1928 Cal. 27.

-----S. 360 (1)—Construction—Deposition of witness, reading of—Accused not present—Presence of Pleader, whether sufficient.

There is nothing in provisions of S. 360 (1), to indicate that the Legislature intended that the reading over in the presence of the Pleader should be a compliance with the provisions of that section only in cases where the personal appearance of the accused is dispensed with by the Court. The natural meaning of the words is that if an accused person has engaged a Pleader, who is in attendance, the reading over the deposition in the presence of the Pleader will be a full compliance with the provisions of the section, if the accused himself does not happen to be present at the time the deposition is read over. Hari Narayan Chandra v. Emperor.

-----S. 360—Criminal trial—Recording of evidence—Statement, how to be read out—Procedure.

S. 360 does not require that an endorsement or certificate should be made or given that the statement of a witness has been read over to him, so that where such endorsement is made but is defective, it is impossible to hold merely on the basis of the endorsement that the depositions were not read over to the witness in the presence of the accused. *Arjun Kurmi v. -----Ss. 360, 361—Distinction between.

The distinction between S. 360 and S. 361 of the Cr. P. C. is very marked. Under the latter section, if evidence is given in a language not understood by the accused or his Pleader, it is to be interpreted into their language, while under the former section when

Where in recording the evidence-in-chief of two witnesses the Magistrate while passing an appealable sentence merely records the words "corroborates P. In such cases the section merely gives him a discretion to take down the evidence or not, and the discretion should be exercised judicially in a reasonable spirit and not arbitrarily. There may be no necessity to record any evidence in 'morning cases'. But where a respectable person is charged with an offence reflecting on his character, and serious allegations are levelled against him, there ought to be some record of evidence to enable him in case of conviction to go to the High Court. The object of reading over a deposition to a witness is to obtain an accurate record from the witness of what he really means to say, and to give him an opportunity of correcting the words which the Magistrate or his clerk has taken down. It is not to enable the accused or his Advocate to suggest corrections. No doubt, the evidence has to be read over in the presence of the accused or of his pleader. He is entitled to be sure that it has been read over, and that the witness has had an opportunity of correcting the written word. But he is not necessarily entitled to the opportunity of suggesting correction. At the same time, it would be a better course if depositions other than mere formal ones were read over so that the accused or his pleader could hear them and give their undivided attention to them. Care would, of course, have to be taken that no suggestion should be conveyed to a witness in the form of a correction which would make him alter his evidence, but there might be obvious slips to which, under proper safeguard, attention might be called by the accused or his pleader. Still it should be remembered that the primary object is to fix the witness and to enable him to protect himself against inaccuracy in the word taken down from his lips. Abdul Rahman v. Emperor.

A conviction cannot be set aside and a new trial ordered on the ground that some of the material records of the trial have been lost. S. 366, Cr. P. C., does not require as a condition of valid judgment that all the records of the case must be in the Court-house at the time of pronouncing the judgment. Where a judgment is lost, the proper course for the Court is to re-write it from memory and place it on record. A Court has inherent power in the case of the loss of a judicial document to restore such record. A conviction and sentence passed by a Court without pronouncing the whole of the written judgment are not void. The irregularity in such a procedure is cured by S. 537. Kamakshamma v. Emperor.

———S. 360—Recording of evidence—Application of Counsel raising objection to recording or omitting to record statements by witnesses—How to be dealt with—Language of examination.

A Judge should not take exception to an application by Counsel to have a certain statement taken down; nor should he regard the making of such applications as an attempt to dictate to the Judge the form of the record. A Counsel is within his rights in making reasonable applications of this kind, and in asking the Court to note his objection to the recording or omission of a statement, if his objection is over-ruled. The Court is also bound to give the accused or his Pleader the opportunity of knowing what is on the record. The law prescribes that this is to be done by having the deposition of each witness read over, when complete, in the presence of the accused, or if he appears by Pleader, of his Pleader. It is not a sufficient compliance with the law to have this done while the evidence of another witness is being recorded, unless the accused, or his Pleader, if he so desires, has had a full opportunity of knowing substantially what is recorded as the examination proceeds. To read over the deposition of a witness while another witness is being examined by the Court is not sufficient compliance with the terms of S. 360 since the intention of that section is that the evidence should be read in such a manner that the accused can hear what is being read and take objection to it. An accused person cannot be expected at one and the same time to listen to the evidence of a fresh witness that is being recorded. S. 367—Appellate judgment—Contents of.

No judgment of a Court, other than a High Court, which purports to dispose of an appeal under S. 424, Cr. P. C., is a legal judgment unless it contains at least (1) the point or points for determination raised by the memorandum of appeal, (2) the decision thereon and (3) the reasons for the decision. Therefore, the following judgment of an Appellate Court was held to be no judgment in law. "There appears no sufficient reason to doubt the evidence for the prosecution. The sentence is not heavy. The appeal is dismissed." Jairam v. Emperor.

S. 367—Appellate judgment, contents of.

Reasons for the decision should be given by an Appellate Court in its judgment in order that the Superior Court may at once know the facts found and the reasons therefor without reference to the record and satisfy itself that the lower Court has done its duty by an honest and careful consideration of the case. There must be sufficient material in the appellate judgment itself to show that the appeal has been properly tried and the judgment or order must bear marks of such intelligent appreciation on the part of the Appellate Court of the necessary facts and material as would warrant the Superior Court to infer that the conclusions were properly arrived at by the lower Appellate Court. *Maroti v. Where the evidence is all oral and its credibility is a mere matter of opinion, the opinion of the Court which heard the witnesses, must be treated as almost conclusive. Although S. 363 makes it incumbent on the Magistrate to record remarks, if any, as he may think material respecting the demeanour of a witness whilst under examination, it is quite a different thing to record a remark about the demeanour of the witness and to make or record a remark or opinion about the substance of the deposition of that witness. The parties are entitled to claim that unless expressly provided to the contrary by law, the Magistrate shall not prejudice their cases or form an opinion about the respective merits of their cases or about the deposition of the witnesses till they have been fully and finally presented to the Magistrate by Counsel, if any, in their concluding arguments and after the entire evidence has been recorded. Any opinion formed and expressed by the Magistrate at an earlier stage of the case is bound to be prejudicial to the party concerned. Proceedings under S. 476, Cr. P. C. when they relate to the merits of the statements made in Court by a witness if started before the close of the case, are calculated to seriously affect the case of the party who called him, as they are bound to frighten the remaining witnesses who must assume them as an indication of the treatment that they themselves are likely to receive if they make a similar statement in Court. *Sikandar Lal Pari v. In the case of a joint trial, the judgment of an Appellate Court, dealing with the case of several accused, should show on the face of it that the case of each accused has been taken into consideration, and should state reasons, as far as may be necessary, to show that the Court has devoted judicial attention to the case of each accused. *Inatullah Sarkar v. If an Appellate Court does not write a judgment in accordance with S. 367, the High Court is not bound to send the case back to the Appellate Court for a re-hearing; it can itself hear the appeal and dispose of it upon an application for revision under S. 439. In such a case, the accused would be deprived of what he calls his right of revision but he cannot complain for, as a matter of fact, there is no such right. Interference in revision is purely discretionary; it is not even necessary to hear the accused. The fact that he is invariably heard, and the fact that the discretion conferred by S. 439 is exercised in a judicial manner, does not make any difference to the fact that the accused has no right to demand any of these things. All that he is entitled to is that a second Court of competent jurisdiction should hear his entire case as an appeal. If he gets that, he has obtained all that the law allows him, and when the High Court hears his appeals in place of a lower Court, he has obtained a good deal more than he has any right to claim. *Bapurao v. In Sub-s. (1) of S. 250 at least, the only Magistrate who may call upon the complainant to show cause is the Magistrate who hears the case and who discharges or acquits all or any of the accused. The Magistrate, in Sub-s. (2) to S. 250, refers to the Magistrate in Sub-s. (1) and the definite article "the" does not mean the Magistrate who succeeds the Magistrate who heard the case or any other Magistrate. Consequently, where a Magistrate who has called upon the complainant to show cause why he should not pay compensation for having made a false and frivolous or vexatious complaint, has retired in the course of proceedings before the passing of the final orders, the notice upon the complainant should be discharged. *Emperor v. A Magistrate is not bound to confine himself merely to a finding that the accused is not proved guilty. Such a verdict often leaves the accused with a stain on his character in the public estimation though not in law and it is the duty of a Magistrate if he considers that the prosecution case is not only not proved but was deliberately false and concocted to give such a finding in favour of the accused so that the accused should leave the Court without a stain on his character. In arriving at the conclusion that a prosecution case is false and fabricated, the Judge is at liberty to make remarks on the character or conduct of certain witnesses who have appeared to support that case for otherwise he cannot arrive at a finding that the documents on which the prosecution rely are false and fabricated. When he has done so, the remark that the conduct of persons doing such a thing is criminal or contemptible follows and is justified on the findings arrived at. The High Court of course can interfere under S. 561-A and expunge remarks from judgment in cases where remarks are made about a person who is not a party to the proceedings or not a witness in the case. The High Court can also interfere when remarks are made about a party to the proceedings or a witness to the case which are not justified by the findings or when it can be shown that the judgment is due to bias or perverse. *Sheikh Karamat Ullah v. An appellate judgment must satisfy the requirements of S. 367, the provisions of which are applicable to the judgments of an Appellate Court. A judgment, therefore, passed in two words 'appeal rejected' is not according to law. An appellate judgment must contain the point or points for determination, the decision thereon and the reasons for the decision. The Appellate Court is not required to write a long and elaborate judgment but it is clearly its duty not only to examine the evidence but also to write a judgment affording a clear indication that the appeal has been properly tried and that the points urged by the appellant have been duly considered and decided. An Appellate Court, which writes a judgment which the High Court is unable to follow without reference to the judgment of the trial Court, obviously fails in the discharge of the duty imposed upon it by the law. *Abdul Wahid v. In other words they should neither make any such sweeping assertions as are not borne out by the evidence produced before them nor should they use language which is unduly harsh. The most offensive feature of the whole case would be where while commenting on the conduct of the Police Officer, the Court makes an appeal to the Press to take up the particular defects pointed out by it in the working of the Police and to start a public agitation against them. Courts are not expected to pay to the gallery nor to invoke the Press in a manner which is liable to be misunderstood and may land the administration in general in an awkward situation. They should play the part of Judges alone and not that of propagandists and confine their whole attention to the evidence led before them and to the matters requiring determination at their hands. In re : Advocate-General.

It is a serious matter for the High Court to expunge remarks from a Magistrate's judgment or order. It will interfere to expunge remarks which are libellous and irrelevant. But if they form an integral part of the judgment or its argument, and if they are inseparable, the Court will not interfere and mutilate a judgment so that it reads disjointedly or incoherently, nor will it interfere merely because the Court may have passed remarks adverse to a witness provided the judgment shows there is some basis for them, however inadequate may appear this basis to the higher Court. It may well be the bounden duty of a Judge or Magistrate in giving his judgment and his reason to comment adversely upon the conduct of witnesses, so also it may be his duty to comment adversely upon the conduct of accused persons even though he may not consider the evidence sufficient to commit them for trial to the Court of Session. Nor will the High Court in revision inquire into question of fact, but in dealing with applications of this nature it will take the Magistrate's judgment as it stands. Where the Magistrate's own order exculpates rather than inculpates the accused, he is not justified in making remarks seriously to his prejudice which will be justified only if his order tended to inculpate rather than exculpate. A Magistrate when he is called upon to investigate a case in which a large number of persons may be involved and may appear to be implicated in some offence, may, in his order, consider the case against a person who is neither a witness nor an accused. Any order obtained by fraud practised on the Court is one which is to be treated as a nullity. Even the Criminal Courts have power to ignore their orders passed either under a mistake or by fraud. It is not the intention of the Procedure Codes that they should encourage the hindering of justice, and all procedure is intended to help justice. S. 489 (2), Cr. P. C., really suggests that it is open to the Magistrate to vary the order of maintenance or to alter it if circumstances so require. A Magistrate passed an order of maintenance in favour of wife. The husband then obtained a decree for restitution of conjugal rights and informed the Magistrate about it without disclosing that an appeal therefrom was then pending. The Magistrate thereupon cancelled his order of maintenance. The decree having been set aside in appeal, the wife informed the Magistrate accordingly, who, upon such information, cancelled his previous order rescinding the order of maintenance and restored the original one. It was contended that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to cancel his order under S. 369, and also that the wife ought to have put in a fresh application : Held, that S. 369 did not apply to the present case in view of the express provisions of Ss. 488 and 489. The Magistrate had jurisdiction to vary or cancel his previous order as this order cancelling the previous order for maintenance was really obtained by fraud upon the Magistrate in his not being apprised on that date that the decree for restitution of conjugal rights was liable to be set aside on appeal which was then pending and an order obtained by fraud must be treated as having no legal effect : Held, also that the wife's making a fresh application was merely a matter of form and not of substance. *Patel Bhagubhai Ranchhodas v. -----S. 367 (5)—Murder—Lesser penalty—Direction, judicial exercise of—Doubt, benefit of—Enhancement, whether advisable—Sentence, lenient, grounds for—Sex of accused.

A Court of Session possesses a direction in the matter of passing sentence under S. 302, Penal Code, but this discretion must be exercised judicially. An accused person is entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt in the matter of sentence as in the matter of conviction. But before passing the lighter sentence, a Judge must satisfy himself that his reasons for doing so are adequate and covered by authority. And while bearing in mind that the primary responsibility for the sentence is his, he should not lose sight of the fact that should he pass a sentence of death, the matter will further be considered by the High Court before the sentence is confirmed. When a sentence of transportation for life has been passed, there are manifest objections to enhancing it, even when a sentence of death ought to have been passed; there is no such objection to commuting a sentence of death to one of transportation for life and such a commutation should not be considered as any reflection on the way in which the Sessions Judge has exercised the discretion given him by law. The mere fact that there was no premeditation or deliberate intention to kill or that the accused is a woman is not a conclusive reason for not passing a sentence of death. Mi She Yi v. Emperor, 25 Cr. L. J. 1121 : 81 I. C. 945 : 2 Bur. L. J. 277 : 1 Rang. 751 : A. I. R. 1924 Rang. 179.

-----S. 367 (5)—Murder Case—Lesser penalty—Reasons.

Conviction under S. 302, I. P. C.—Death sentence should be imposed—Assessors giving opinion as not guilty is no reason for awarding lesser sentence—Responsibility of awarding sentence rests with the Judge alone. *Local Government v. -----S. 367—Non-compliance.

Where in a case of six, some prisoners are accused of no less than seven separate offences, yet the Judge has framed one point for decision only, such a compliance with the provisions of S. 367 is perfunctory and perilous. 35 Cr. -----Ss. 367, 423—Remand—Magistrate, failure of, to write proper judgment—Appeal—Procedure.

Where in an appeal to the Court of Session, the Judge finds that the Magistrate has not written a judgment in conformity with the provisions of S. 367, the correct procedure is to accept the appeal and to remand the case for hearing de novo. S. 423 of the Code does not authorise the retention of an appeal on the file of the Sessions Judge when asking for a judgment which the Magistrate has failed to record. In re : Karupiah Pillai, 21 Cr. ————S. 369—Review of order of one Judge of High Court.

In the case of a criminal appeal or a criminal revision petition, there is no provision in the Code of Criminal Procedure for dismissal for default of appearance. In a criminal case the matter is not between party and party and it is the duty of the Court to go into the case and dispose of it on the merits. Where a criminal appeal or a revision is dismissed without hearing, there is no judgment at all and the Judge or the Bench which disposed of the matter for default of the appearance can re-hear the matter. The order of dismissal for default in such cases is no judgment at all and the order is tantamount to an adjournment of the case till someone appears and moves the Court to hear him. The High Court, although it is not bound to hear Counsel in support of a criminal revision petition is not entitled to dismiss it for default of appearance but can only dispose of it on the merits. The exception contained in S. 369 of the Cr. P. C. in favour of the High Court is with reference to the power of review in regard to cases decided by a Judge of the High Court presiding over the Sessions when points are reserved for consideration by the Full Bench or on the certification of the Advocate-General. A Division Bench of the High Court has no power to revise its judgment pronounced in a criminal revision case or a criminal appeal. Kunhammall Haji v. Emperor.

required by S. 370 in the usual way in the printed form is only a mere irregularity and not an illegality which vitiates a trial. Inasmuch as a Presidency Magistrate is only required to record brief reasons for a conviction, there is no serious objection to his referring to a previous judgment passed by him in the case instead of re-writing those portions of it which should have been included in the final order. *Bishnupada Deb v. S. 370 permits, no doubt, a Presidency Magistrate instead of recording a judgment to record merely the reasons for his conviction, but this must be done in such a manner that the High Court in revision may be in a position to judge whether there were sufficient materials before him to support the conviction. Where the record prepared by a Presidency Magistrate did not contain a summary of the evidence, or such a statement of the facts as would enable the High Court to say whether the materials were sufficient to support the conviction, nor was there anything on the record to show that the accused had been previously convicted : Held, that the judgment was defective and the conviction should be set aside. *Toolsey Kaharin v. Per Kennedy, J. C.—As a general rule, the confirming Courts should deal with matters of confirmation as if an appeal were under hearing, and that appeal covered all possible grounds, which might and should have been raised, even if they are not actually raised in the appeal. The Court must scrutinize the evidence and see whether the verdict of the Jury is perverse, whether evidence has been improperly excluded and improperly admitted and whether the trial Judge has directed the Jury on the points of decision and has pointed out to them how far those points, in his opinion, are established or not established by admissible and relevant evidence and has otherwise directed the Jury properly. It is not open to the convict to attack the verdict of the Jury merely on the ground that the Jury should not have believed the evidence nor that the evidence was insufficient, provided there appear sufficient grounds for the verdict, but he must attack the sentence on the ground that the evidence was irrelevant or improperly admitted, or that it is extremely inadequate so much so that it was the duty of the trial Court to tell the Jury that there was no case against the accused. *Gul v. S. 376—Power of High Court—Jury trial—Death sentence—Confirmation of sentence.

A High Court, in the exercise of its jurisdiction confirming death sentences, has the power to go behind the verdict of the Jury and substitute its own finding for the unanimous finding of the Jury, but as a matter of practice, the High Court will not generally allow the verdict to be attacked arbitrarily, it being necessary for the convict to show prima facie that the verdict is unsupported by evidence. *Gul v. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 403

The accused was tried under S. 498 of the Penal Code on the charge that he, between the 10th and 31st December, 1927, took away R from the custody of N with intent to commit illicit intercourse with her and was detaining her at his house. He was acquitted on that charge. He was subsequently prosecuted under Ss. 363 and 366, Penal Code, on the charge that he, on the 10th of December, 1927, kidnapped R from the lawful guardianship of N with intent that she may be seduced to illicit intercourse. The Magistrate who acquitted the accused on the first charge was not competent to try an offence under S. 366, Penal Code, though he was competent to try an offence under S. 363 : Held, that the accused was not entitled to have a verdict of not guilty on the plea of autre fois acquit as regards the charge under S. 366 but was, however, entitled to such a verdict under S. 363. *Ghann Prasad Singh v. An accused was placed upon trial for aiding and abetting forgery in connection with a document presented for registration and was acquitted. He was then placed upon his trial for aiding and abetting cheating in connection with the same transaction. He was convicted by the Magistrate but was acquitted on appeal. The District Registrar thereupon gave sanction for his trial for an offence under S. 82 of the Registration Act. He was committed to Sessions and the Sessions Judge made a reference to the High Court suggesting that S. 403, Cr. P. C., was a bar to his trial : Held, that the former trial of the accused for the offence of aiding and abetting forgery was in no way a bar to his trial for an offence under the Registration Act, nor was his trial and acquittal of the offence of aiding and abetting the cheating a bar by S. 403 (4) as at the former trial the Court was not competent to charge with or convict or acquit of the offence with which he was subsequently charged by reason of the want of sanction. *Emperor v. Accordingly he framed a charge under S. 186 and took evidence of the defence. It was contended for the defence that the trial was illegal under S. 195 (1) (a), Cr. P. C., there being no complaint by the public servant concerned or some other public servant to whom he was subordinate. This plea was upheld and the accused acquitted. The public servant subsequently filed a complaint and the accused raised the plea of autrefois acquit: Held, that the prior acquittal was void under S. 530, Cr. P. Per Bose, J.—The Executive Government has not got unfettered and unqualified freedom of action in these matters. Viewed in a broad and liberal light, its powers in this respect are in a sense derived from a statutory delegation of the Royal Prerogative of pardon; not co-extensive with it, and not superior to it, in fact S. 401 (5), Cr. P. C., leaves the right of His Majesty and of the Governor-General, when such right is delegated to him, intact; but certainly of a like general character. That being so, the rights of the executive cannot be greater than those of His Majesty himself except and unless, and only in so far as, they are specifically enlarged by statute. It cannot be said that an order of remission is never open to recall. It may be, in certain circumstances, fraud and mistake; for example, might justify such action. But it cannot be done arbitrarily. The matter vitally affects the liberty of the subject, and so, if such power exists at all, it can, only be exercised in circumstances which a Court of Justice would uphold on general grounds of justice, equity and good conscience, and of public policy. In every case Government must be prepared to substantiate and justify its action and that means that it must give reasons, first to the person concerned, and then, if the matter reaches Court, to that Tribunal. It cannot merely say: "I have done it and

S. 250—Hearing complainant—Necessity of.

S. 250 does not require that in the case of a complaint being found frivolous or vexatious, the complainant must be called upon to show cause why he should not be made to pay compensation, it only requires any objection which is urged to be recorded and considered. The section is not intended to multiply the proceedings but to be applied in a summary manner. A party who has the right to make a formal objection and have it recorded can waive that right by his acquiescence. Pancham v. Emperor. 24 Cr. L. J. 719 :

S. 250—Hearing complainant—Necessity of.

The trial Magistrate accepted the resident's contention that the tin shed in question existed for the last six years. He discharged the resident and further directed in view of the facts that the Municipal Committee should pay her ten rupees as compensation without giving the Committee an opportunity of explaining why the compensation should not be awarded and the Committee's action was not grossly careless or vindictive: Held, that this was not a case where compensation should have been given: Held, also, that the order of the trial Magistrate should be set aside, since the provisions of S. 250, which are mandatory,

S. 250—Hearing complainant—Necessity of.

There was an order of discharge of the accused under S. 376, Penal Code, with a finding that the case was a false one, which was typewritten, and contained finally "I direct, therefore, that the accused be discharged. The case was classified as false." This was signed by the Magistrate and running straight on the same date, with the same typewriter, and obviously all done in one piece, came the further order under S. 250. It started at the bottom of the same side of the page as the judgment, and, after half a line, was continued on the back of the sheet so that it was manifest that the judgment and the further order were typed out at one and the same time: Held, that the order of discharge and the further order were one and the same, and the intrusion of the Magistrate's signature in the middle of the page could not affect the merits of the case. *Ma Sin v. Where a Magistrate discharged an accused and in doing so, declared the case to be a mistake of law and maliciously false and vexatious and, therefore, ordered "that the complainant submit, to any cause to be shown by him to-day, is to pay Rs. 50, to the accused as compensation under S. 250 and on the following day made the order absolute as no cause was shown and ordered the complainant to suffer simple imprisonment for 30 days in default of payment of the compensation: Held, that, as regards the first part of the order, the requirements of S. 250 were duly fulfilled, as the Magistrate fixed the compensation in his order of discharge. The proviso to S. 250 contemplates that the direction in the first paragraph shall be conditional or in the nature of a Rule, and that that Rule shall not be made absolute until the complainant has shown cause. *Lalit Mohan Singha Roy v. Where at the time of announcing judgment in a criminal case the complainant is absent and the Magistrate proposes to make an order directing the payment of compensation under S. 250, the proper procedure is to issue a summons for the attendance of the complainant and to give him an opportunity of showing cause why an order under S. 250 should not be made against him. The petitioner gave notice to the Municipality of his intention to erect a building, and almost immediately commenced the building. Within 6 weeks from the receipt of the petitioner's notice, the Municipality at first issued two notices, purporting to be under S. 121 but substantially under S. 92 (2) of the Burma Municipal Act, to the petitioner requiring him to keep a passage between his building and the next building for scavenging purposes. The petitioner failed to obey the notice. He was prosecuted for disobeying the notice, but was acquitted on the ground that access to the premises for scavenging purposes could be had from the back. After this prosecution failed, the Municipality issued another notice, under S. 92 (2) of the Act requiring space to be left on either side of the building within one month. This notice was disobeyed, too, and the Municipality instituted a fresh prosecution for this disobedience. The petitioner was acquitted on the ground that he has been tried on the same facts before and acquitted. The Municipality then issued a notice under S. 92 (3), requiring the petitioner to alter his buildings so as to leave the space as directed in the previous notices. The petitioner was again prosecuted for disobeying this direction and was convicted: Held, that the disobedience of a direction under S. 92 (3) was not the same offence as disobedience of the previous notices under S. 92 (2), nor were the facts constituting the last disobedience facts on which the petitioner could have been charged with a different offence at the previous trials. Some of the facts which constituted the present offence were not in existence at the time of the previous trials. S. 403, Cr. P. C., therefore, did not apply. Oborno Charan Chowdry v. Emperor.

Two persons AR and NK were convicted, the former under S. 420 and the latter under Ss. 420/109, Penal Code. They appealed, and NK was acquitted. AR moved the High Court in revision, which held that the conviction should have been under S. 477-A, Penal Code, and directed the Magistrate to commit the case to the Court of Session under that section. The Magistrate issued a notice to both AR and NK, requiring their attendance before him to show cause why they should not be committed to the Court of Sessions. NK protested, relying on the fact that he had been acquitted by the Sessions Judge and that until such acquittal was set aside, the Magistrate could not commit him again, on the record of the proceedings as they then stood, to take his trial for an offence under S. 477-A, Penal Code. The Magistrate, however, expressed his intention of committing both accused to the Sessions. NK then moved the Sessions Judge to set aside the Magistrate's order in so far as it affected his commitment. The Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court for directions as to the propriety of the Magistrate's order. Held, that NK could not, so long as his acquittal under S. 420, Penal Code stood, be properly tried again, upon the record as it then stood, for an offence under S. 477 and that if the Crown wished to proceed against him, they must do so in a proper manner and by a separate proceeding, and not upon the original record. *Emperor v. A person falsely represented himself to be another and borrowed money by executing a deed of mortgage of property standing in the latter's name. He subsequently falsely personated the other in the Registration Office for the purpose of getting the document registered. He was charged with the offence of cheating by false personation under Ss. 419-114 of the Penal Code but acquitted. Proceedings were subsequently instituted against him for an offence under S. 82 (c) of the Registration Act: Held, that the offence of cheating by personation was completed at the time the deed of mortgage was signed and the money was borrowed and the offence committed in the Registration Office was a different and subsequent offence, and that consequently the prosecution for the offence under S. 82 (c) of the Registration Act was not barred by S. 403, Cr. The "competency" of the Court to try an offence does not mean the status or character of the former Court to try the offence with which the accused is subsequently charged, but it also includes within its purview cases in which the Court, though otherwise qualified to try the case could not have done so, because certain conditions precedent for the exercise of its jurisdiction had been fulfilled. *Emperor v. The complainants thinking that the offences should not be jointly tried, addressed a petition to the Magistrate that the trial should be limited to items concerning B. The Magistrate "filed" the application, but confined the trial to items concerning B. A and B compromised the case. C filed a fresh complaint on the same facts as regards items borrowed from her: Held, that the Magistrate was not precluded by law from re-hearing the complaint or from entertaining the fresh complaint of C on the same facts. Where a person was charged under R. 21 of the Burma Forest Rules with having extracted teak timber without a license and under R. 71 for converting timber at a saw pit without a saw pit license, and with other offences, and the prosecution withdrew the former two charges but subsequently prosecuted him afresh on the same facts for offences under Ss. 379 and 411 of the Penal Code: Held, that the principle of autrefois acquit applied and that the prosecution for offences under Ss. 379 and 411 of the Penal Code was illegal. *Ycok Kuk v. A person, who has already been convicted of an offence under S. 121-A, Penal Code, for a conspiracy to overawe the Government of India by means of criminal force, to wit, by causing bombs to be thrown at British officers cannot, on the same facts, be subsequently convicted under S. 120-B, Penal Code, for a conspiracy to kill the Europeans, having regard to S. 403 of the Cr. The accused were charged with kidnapping a minor girl under S. 363, I. P. C., and also with rioting under S. 147 with the common object of kidnapping the girl. The trying Magistrate found that the girl was not proved to be under sixteen years so he held that the charge of kidnapping could not be sustained, and that in consequence, the charge of rioting with the common object of kidnapping also failed. He, however, convicted them under S. 143, I. P. C. of being members of an unlawful assembly, the common object of which was to commit assault and wrongful restraint. On appeal, the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction and the sentence on the ground that the accused, having been acquitted of the charge of rioting in order to kidnap, could not be convicted of being member of an unlawful assembly with a different common object, but at the same time he directed the accused to be tried afresh on charges of abducting the girl in order to confine her secretly and of rioting with that common object under S. 365 and 147, I. P. C.: Held, that the accused were entitled to the protection of S. 403, Cr. P. C., and could not be tried afresh for offences under Ss. 465 and 147, I. P. C. Kala Nath v. Emperor. 21 Cr. L. The Police charged the accused before a Sub-Magistrate under Ss. 147, 323 and 325, Penal Code. During the course of the enquiry P. W. No. 1 who had initiated proceedings before the Police, applied to the District Magistrate to commit the case to the Sessions Court. The District Magistrate rejected the petition, holding that the petition was incompetent and that the Police alone had a locus standi to move in the matter. The Sub-Magistrate acquitted the accused of the offence under S. 147, Penal Code. After the termination of the trial, P. W. No. 1 applied to the Sessions Judge under S. 436, who ordered the committal of the accused under Ss. 147, and 304, Penal Code: Held, (1) that the committal under S. 147, I. P. C., was illegal as the accused had been acquitted in respect of the charge under that section: (2) that the commitment under S. 304 was valid as the Sub-Magistrate who had evidence of facts pointing to an offence under that section must be deemed to have impliedly discharged the accused of that offence and it was competent for the Sessions Judge to set aside that order suo motu. *Gaudi Apparazu v. Two persons, A and B, were tried for causing simple hurt to one C. The case was compounded and both the accused persons were acquitted. Subsequently, C died of injury inflicted by A and B. The Magistrate committed A for trial under S. 304, I. P. C., and discharged B. The Sessions Judge, on perusal of the record, directed the commitment of B also for trial under S. 304, and B was accordingly committed: Held, (1) that there was no legal bar to the trial of B on a charge under S. 304, Penal Code: (2) that a commitment could only be quashed on a point of law, and as no point of law arose in this case, the commitment could not be set aside. *Sailani v. The phrase "has once been tried by a Court of competent jurisdiction" in S. 403 (1) is not one which limits the application of the provisions to reasons affecting the nature or ordinary powers of the Tribunal. It is wide enough to cover a case where the first trial was ab initio void owing to the absence of a complaint. In such a case, therefore, S. 403 (1) is no bar to a fresh trial of the accused. Nauakram v. Emperor. 19 Cr. L. J. 796 :

Accused was charged with an offence under S. 382 read with S. 109 of the Penal Code. The Court held that he was not guilty of the offence with which he was charged but was guilty of an offence under S. 411 of the Code. He was not, however, convicted of the latter offence, as the Court imagined that it had no power to convict him of that offence on the charge as it stood. He was subsequently prosecuted for an offence under S. 411 of the Code: Held, (1) that having regard to the provisions of S. 236, Cr. P. C., III. (a) the accused could have been charged in the previous trial with an offence under S. 411, Penal Code: (2) that, consequently, the provisions of S. 403 (1) Cr. P. Though there is no absolute bar to an accused person being again put in peril of a fresh trial in respect of the same offence in a case where the first trial has ended in an order of discharge, it is a well-recognized and salutary rule of law that a Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction should not entertain a fresh complaint in respect of the same offence when it is based on facts which were known to the complainant and on evidence which was available when the first trial was held. A departure from the rule is in effect an assumption by the Magistrate of the powers of the Appellate Court, and is utterly contrary to sound principle. Emperor v. Alias. 31 Cr. L. J. 687 :

An accused was entrusted with three sums of money on various dates. He committed criminal breach of trust by dishonestly misappropriating them and was tried under S. 408, Penal Code. It was a part of the prosecution case at the trial that the accused had made false entries in the account-book for the purpose of carrying out the alleged misappropriation and with the intention of concealing his alleged breach of trust. He was unanimously acquitted by the Jury and was subsequently charged under S. 477-A, Penal Code, for having made false entries in the account-book in respect of the said three sums of money: Held, that, on the facts of the case, the accused ought not to be put on his trial in respect of these charges, as it would, in effect, amount to trying him again in respect of the same evidence and in respect of the same matters upon which he had already been tried and acquitted by the Jury. *Emperor v. Several articles of property stolen from different persons were found in possession of the accused. He was tried in respect of some of the articles upon a charge under S. 411, Penal Code, and was acquitted. He was subsequently prosecuted under the same section in respect of the other properties found in his possession on the same date, but there was no evidence that the articles were received at different times: Held, that under S. 403, Cr. Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 403

—S. 403—Scope—Autrefois acquit—Effect of S. 308—English law compared—“Might have been made.”

The accused was indicted in the Calcutta Court of Criminal Sessions under five counts which were, firstly, the murder of one N under Ss. 302-34, I. P. C., secondly, murder of the same man under Ss. 302-114, I. P. C., thirdly, abetting the murder of the same man under Ss. 302-109, I. P. C., fourthly, the murder of one A, fifthly, culpable homicide of A. The accused pleaded not guilty to all the charges. The Jury unanimously acquitted the accused of the first and the fourth charges and differed as to the other counts, there being not as many as six who agreed in opinion. The Judge discharged the jury under S. 305, Cr. P. C., and directed a re-trial. On the re-trial of the accused before a fresh jury on the remaining counts of the indictment, the accused pleaded not guilty as also autrefois acquit, and it was urged in defence (1) that as the accused had been acquitted of the charge of murder of A, he could not be tried again for committing culpable homicide on him; and (2) that as he had been acquitted of an offence under Ss. 302-34, I. P. C., in relation to the murder of N, he could not be convicted of an offence in relation to the same man under Ss. 302-109, or 302-114, I. P. C.: Held, that S. 403, protected the accused only against a trial for murder and any other offence for which a different charge from the one made against him “might have been made.” But the offence of culpable homicide for which he was tried again was one of the charges actually made against him and on the terms of S. 403, the first objection failed. If the accused had been charged with murder alone, a verdict of not guilty would have protected him from another trial for culpable homicide and were he acquitted of culpable homicide, he would be protected from a trial for any offence involving hurt; but where a charge was made, the case fell outside the provisions of the law dealing with cases where it might have been made. That for the purposes of S. 403, the accused was not being tried again but was being tried on the original indictment, and on his first plea of not guilty, S. 308, Cr. P. C., did not affect the construction of S. 403-A. That S. 403 should not be construed with reference to the English Law relating to criminal pleading. Ss. 271 and 272, Cr. P. C., contain all that is necessary as to pleading, and there is no need to supplement their contents by a reference to any other system of judicature. That the plea of not guilty was one not recognised by Cr. P. C. and it was not open to the accused to make any answer to an indictment except guilty or a claim to be tried. S. 403 has nothing to do with pleading, but is in terms of a limitation on the jurisdiction of the Court. A defence under that section may be set up at any time before verdict in any form. That even assuming the case to be governed by the English Law of pleading, autrefois acquit was not properly pleaded. That the accused had already pleaded not guilty in the first trial and that plea was still awaiting adjudication and the second plea, was, therefore, unnecessary and of no effect. That even if the principles of English Law were to be applied to the present case, the acquittal for murder was no bar to the re-trial for culpable homicide. Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta Roy. 15 Cr. L. J. 460 : 24 I. C. 340 : 18 C. W. N. 723 : 41 Cal. 1072 ; A. I. R. 1914 Cal. 901.

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 403

—S. 403—Scope—Conspiracy—Accused once tried on charge of conspiracy, whether can be tried again for fresh entry into conspiracy connected with previous conspiracy.

What S. 403 lays down, if it is a conspiracy matter to be considered, is that a man cannot be tried again for that particular entry into the conspiracy for which he has already been tried. S. 403 does not say that for any fresh entry into the conspiracy, he cannot be tried. When a person, who is tried and convicted or acquitted on a charge of conspiracy, subsequently enters into a conspiracy, connected with the previous one, by a fresh agreement, such agreement amounts to fresh participation in conspiracy and S. 403 is, therefore, no bar to the trial of such person with regard to such fresh entry. Purnananda Das Gupta v. Emperor. (F. B.) 40 Cr. L. J. 199 : 179 I. C. 506 : 68 C. L. J. 206 : 11 R. C. 557 : I. L. R. 1939 I. Cal. 1 : A. I. R. 1939 Cal. 65.

—S. 403—Scope—Penal Code, S. 323—Petitioner and others tried for affray—Charge under S. 323, if can also be framed against petitioner.

The offence of causing hurt in the course of an affray in the public street is an entirely distinct offence from the affray itself on the ground, among others, that the affray is committed not alone by the party causing the hurt but by both parties, namely, the party causing the hurt and the party receiving the hurt. Where the two offences are connected with each other in that manner, the matter is governed not by Sub-s. 1 but by Sub-s. (2) of S. 403, and this sub-section definitely provides for a separate trial of the second offence. Consequently when certain persons are being tried for an affray, a charge under S. 323, Penal Code, cannot also be framed against one of them and tried. Sankatta Rai v. Khaderan Mian. 37 Cr. L. —S. 403—Scope.

S. 403 is very much wider than the rule of autrefois acquit in England and the plea of autrefois acquit can be taken at any stage in a trial. But the proper time for a plea is when the accused is called upon to plead. The plea of autrefois acquit cannot be ‘constructively’ decided. Emperor v. John McIver. (F. B.) 37 Cr. L. The wording of S. 403, Cr. P. Where, therefore, a conviction is set aside on the ground that there was a want of sanction for the trial, S. 403 does not operate as a

A complaint was made against the accused disclosing offences punishable under S. 409 and 477-A, Penal Code. The case was by some mistake made over for trial to an Honorary Magistrate exercising the powers of a Magistrate of the Second Class. He proceeded to deal with the case as one under S. 408, I. P. C., and finally acquitted the accused. Subsequently the complainant presented a further complaint to the District Magistrate praying for the trial of the accused under Ss. 409 and 477-A, Penal Code. The District Magistrate thereupon took cognizance of the case and referred the complaint to a First Class Magistrate for disposal: Held, that inasmuch as the Second Class Magistrate who

The accused was convicted at a Criminal Sessions before a Judge of the Chief Court and sentenced to death. In a proceeding under S. 12 of the Lower Burma Courts Act, 1900, the conviction and sentence were set aside by a Bench on the ground that the verdict had not been arrived at in due course of law ; but the accused was not acquitted. The District Magistrate then took cognizance of the case against the accused and transferred it to a subordinate Magistrate for inquiry with a view to the recommitment of the accused. In an application for revision on behalf of the accused, it was argued that the District Magistrate's order was illegal, inasmuch as the original commitment was still valid and subsisting, and the trial upon that commitment had not been completed : Held, after reference to Ss. 423, 434 and 439, Cr. Whenever an Assistant Sessions Judge sentences any of the accused in a case to more than 4 years' imprisonment, the appeal always lies to the High Court, whether it be by the person who is sentenced to 4 years or by one who is sentenced to less than 4 years in the same case; and the Sessions Judge has no jurisdiction to entertain an appeal from persons sentenced to less than 4 years. *Palani Koravan v. The phrase “sentence of imprisonment for a term exceeding four years” in clause (b) of S. 408 has reference to the substantive sentence of imprisonment apart from any sentence of fine or imprisonment in default of the payment of the fine. Therefore, where a Magistrate specially empowered under S. 30, Cr. P. —S. 403—Scope—Test of application—Principle.

The question as to whether a particular trial is barred by reason of previous prosecution ending in conviction or acquittal is a question to be determined on the facts and circumstances of a particular case. The true test is not so much whether the facts are the same in both trials as whether the acquittal or conviction from the first charge necessarily involves an acquittal or conviction on the second charge. The provisions contained in S. 403 are complete by themselves on the subject of the effect of previous acquittal or conviction and no question of exercise of inherent jurisdiction or the application of the rule of res judicata arises where there are specific provisions in the law. *Jitendra Nath Gupta v. —S. 403—Scope—Test for determining identity of offences.

One of the tests for determining the identity of the offences is whether the evidence necessary to support the indictment would have been sufficient to procure a legal conviction of the first. It is inexpedient to address a joint complaint to the Magistrate with reference to two independent transactions affecting two individuals separately and which do not present any common feature excepting that the accused is the same. *Hukam Singh v. The principles underlying the English Common Law pleas of autrefois convict and autrefois acquit have been embodied so far as India is concerned, within the limits, however narrow they may be, of the language of S. 403 itself. The language of the section should not be stretched nor should the principles be extended in any way so as to give benefit to the accused, of the spirit underlying the provisions of the section, for, it would be bewildering and, indeed, might result in great injustice to the community

—S. 250—Jurisdiction—Case triable by Magistrate—Power to award compensation—Possibility that case triable exclusively by Court of Sessions might arise, if proved, effect of.

A Magistrate made an order for compensation under S. 250, Cr. P. C., in a case under Ss. 463 and 323, Penal Code, both of which were within the Magistrate's jurisdiction. The Sessions Judge made a reference on the ground that if there was any offence, it was one under S. 467, Penal Code, which was exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions. But it was found by both the Courts that no offence was committed at all : Held, that it was not incumbent on the Magistrate to go out of the way to find that a case exclusively triable by a Court of Sessions might arise from the facts before him, if they were proved, and the Magistrate was entitled to act under S. 250. *Bal-kishen v. ———S. 413—Construction—Appeal, right of, when appealable and non-appealable sentences passed in one judgment—Reference to High Court.

S. 413 declares in quite unambiguous terms that in those cases in which a Court passes only a light sentence, the convicted person shall have no right of appeal. The words used in the section cannot bear the construction that no appeal lies at the instance of a convicted person against a judgment in which no other sentence than one not exceeding one month has been passed. Consequently, where at a joint trial some accused persons are sentenced to appealable sentences and some to non-appealable sentences, the former alone can appeal. This strict interpretation might, on occasions lead to apparent injustice, e. g., where on appeal by those having right of appeal, the conviction is set aside. Under the existing practice such injustice can be removed by the procedure of a reference for revision to the High Court under S. 435 or 438, Cr. P. C. Unar Gool v. Emperor. 18 Cr. L. J. 72 :

Cr. P. CODE (1898), S. 415

———Ss. 415, 413—Aggregate sentence—Sentences of fines only under Ss. 147 and 379, Penal Code—Whether can be combination of punishments—Revision or appeal, which lies.

The six applicants were convicted by a Special Magistrate under Ss. 147 and 379 in respect of an occurrence and two of them were also convicted on another charge under S. 379, Penal Code, which offence was said to have been committed two days after the occurrence. On the charges relating to the previous incident all the six were sentenced to a fine of Rs. 8 each under both the sections and on the separate charge under S. 379, the two accused were sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 8 each : Held, that the sentence of fine of Rs. 2 each was a combination of two punishments, one imposed under S. 147 and the other under S. 379, Penal Code, but if a separate sentence of fine had been imposed under each of the sections, it would nevertheless have been a combination of punishments within the meaning of S. 415, and consequently no revision against the conviction was maintainable but the remedy was by way of an appeal. Makrand Singh v. Ganga.

Two or more punishments of the same kind (e. g., fine only) can constitute a combination of two punishments within the meaning of S. 415 and the presence of the words, "or S. 414" and "or more" in S. 415 clearly leads to the conclusion that the punishments referred to in that section include not only punishments of different kinds but also punishments of the same kind. *Makrand Singh v. In respect of any order of detention in a Borstal School for any period, passed by a Magistrate, there is a right of appeal to the local Court of Session, and the only circumstances in which the appeal against such an order will lie to the High Court is when a co-accused, who has been tried together with the juvenile affected by the order, has been sentenced to imprisonment for a term exceeding four years. In such a case the appeal will lie to the High Court under the provisions of proviso (b) to S. 408, Cr. P. C. Where, therefore, under the provision of S. 25 (1), Burma Prevention of Crime (Young Offenders) Act, the accused have been directed to be detained in a Borstal School for a period of five years by the Second Additional Special Power Magistrate, their appeal lies to the Court of Session of the District. *Nga Tha v. The words “trial” in the Cr. P. C. has been used in a restricted sense and does not include judgment in the case. The “conclusion of the trial” of a case takes place before the judgment is delivered, and the judgment, therefore, is no part of the trial and is outside the scope of a trial as contemplated by the Code. Where, therefore, a trial was held before an Assistant Sessions Judge and after the conclusion of the arguments but before the delivery of the judgment, the Magistrate got an order that he was made an Additional Sessions Judge from the date he commenced the trial of the case and subsequently delivered the judgment convicting the accused : Held, that the appeal from the conviction lay to the Sessions Judge and not to the High Court. That the order making him Additional Sessions Judge though retrospective in terms, could, in view of the provisions of S. 39, take effect only from the date on which the order was communicated to him. *Bakshi Ram v. Although in exceptional circumstances the High Court will interfere in revision even with an acquittal, the High Court will not consider doing so until the normal procedure has been followed and has failed. The normal procedure for the party aggrieved is to apply to the District Magistrate, who will then refer the matter, if he thinks proper, to Government, and Government can, if they think proper, sanction proceedings under S. 417, Cr. The Police again challaned him under Ss. 454 and 411, Penal Code, and he was duly tried by another Magistrate and convicted. On appeal, the Sessions Judge set aside the conviction on the ground that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction to try the accused for the offence of which he had already been discharged. The Local Government appealed against the Sessions Judge's order of acquittal: Held, that although the view of law relied upon by the Sessions Judge was erroneous, yet there were no sufficient grounds for an appeal against the order of acquittal, and that under the circumstances, there was no justification for setting aside that order. *Emperor v. —S. 417—Appeal against acquittal—Distinction between an appeal from acquittal and conviction—Interference of.

Under Cr. P. C. appeals from convictions and acquittals are on an equal footing. In order to justify interference with a judgment of acquittal on the question of fact, it is sufficient if the finding is clearly wrong on the evidence and unreasonable in the opinion of the Appellate Court, whether or not unreasonableness amounts to perversity, stupidity or incompetence, or the Court below can be said to have obstinately blundered in coming to it. Upon sound principles of criminal jurisprudence, the indications of error in the judgment of acquittal ought to be clearer and more palpable and the evidence more cogent and convincing in order to justify its being set aside than would be necessary in the case of a judgment of conviction. *Emperor v. The words “notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained” in S. 413, Cr. P. C., are very important and set aside any right of appeal which might be held to have been created by Ss. 407 to 410, Cr. P. C. Therefore, an accused, who is convicted and sentenced to a sentence which is not appealable at the same trial with other accused who are convicted and sentenced to appealable sentences, has no right of appeal. *Hussain-Khan v. No appeal lies at the instance of a person against whom a non-appealable sentence has been passed, on the ground that appealable sentences have been passed against others jointly tried with him. Only persons on whom appealable sentences have been passed have the right of appeal. Where several accused are tried jointly, the adjudication as against each of the accused is a ‘case’ within the meaning of S. 413. The moment sentences are passed against each of the accused, the case is split into a number of cases within the meaning of that section. It does not follow as a matter of course that because some of the accused tried along with others are acquitted in appeal on the merits, the others should necessarily have the benefit of finding of the Appellate Court. In re : Venkatakhishnayya. 18 Cr. Under S. 417 the direction by the Local Government to present an appeal to the High Court from an order of acquittal must be given to a Public Prosecutor. It may be given in a letter, whereby the Public Prosecutor is appointed as such; but it does not follow that the mere fact that a person has been directed to present such an appeal to the High Court involves his appointment as Public Prosecutor for the purposes of the case. Where the liberty of subject is involved and an appeal is sought to be preferred against an order of acquittal, the statute must be strictly construed and full compliance with its provisions required. The Secretary to the Government of Behar and Orissa requested the Legal Remembrancer of Bengal to file an appeal against an order of acquittal passed by a Deputy Magistrate in Behar. Accordingly, the appeal was presented by the Deputy Legal Remembrancer to the High Court; Held, that the appeal was incompetent. Emperor v. Gaya Prasad.

He has the right which he had in the trial Court of being given the benefit of a reasonable doubt as to his guilt. He must also have the benefit of the opinion of the trial Court upon the credibility of the witnesses whom that Court had the advantage of seeing face to face and judging of their demeanour and he has the right to ask that the acquittal should not be set aside unless the trial Court has taken a perverse view of the evidence and has arrived at an un-

The rules and the limitations affecting appeals from acquittals are on a par with those relating to appeals from convictions. An appeal from the verdict of the jury stand upon a different basis. In an appeal from an order of acquittal there is always a presumption in favour of the innocence of the accused. This presumption very materially affects the question of onus which except within a limited range of cases lies upon the Crown, and where the finding of the subordinate tribunal is in favour of the accused, the burden lies upon the prosecution to prove that the finding reached by the Court below, was not justified by the evidence. Where the evidence against the accused is too scanty or insufficient to support the charge, the finding of the Court below cannot be displaced. Again, where the case is somewhere on the border line or very near it and it was possible for the Court upon a balance of probabilities, to hold a person guilty or not guilty, the reversal of the order of acquittal is not only undesirable and inexpedient but is calculated to cause a miscarriage of justice. Where, however, the balance of evidence is distinctly against the accused or where material evidence has been misappreciated, overlooked or ignored, the High Court is bound to step in as much in the interest of the administration of justice as of the public generally. Emperor v. Ram Adhin Singh.

—Ss. 417 and 439—Rights of accused—Appeal against acquittal—Right of accused to go into findings of fact.

In an appeal against acquittal, the accused is entitled to ask the Court to consider all the evidence before it and all the possible grounds which may be raised against the conviction. If, therefore, the Counsel for the accused is entitled to argue on the facts of the case to show that the accused has not committed an offence under S. 304, Penal Code, then although the acceptance of those arguments may not automatically set aside, the conviction under S. 335, Penal Code, yet if the Court were satisfied that no offence was committed, it would undoubtedly exercise suo motu its powers under S. 439 (1), and set aside the conviction. *Public Prosecutor v. —————S. 420—Appeal through Jail—Right to argue appeal in person—Crown engaging Counsel for accused—Accused wishing not to be represented by him—Counsel's duty to conduct appeal.

When a prisoner sentenced to death subject to confirmation by the High Court, presents his appeal from Jail under the provisions of S. 420 of the Cr. P. C., he is not entitled to appear in person to argue his appeal before the High Court. If, as a concession, a Counsel is, in such a case, retained by the Crown to argue his appeal before the High Court but the accused refuses to give him any instructions, stating that he does not wish to be represented by him, it is the duty of the Counsel to conduct the appeal on behalf of the accused without considering what the accused's views may be on the subject. The concession of the Crown towards the accused may or may not be appreciated by the accused but it in no way affects the conduct of the appeal. Ram Prasad Bismill v. Emperor.
